GUARD, gyård, s. 92. A man, or body of men, whose business is to watch; a state of caution, a state of vigilance; limitation, anticipation of objection; an ornamental hem, lace, or border; part of the hilt of a sword.
 ☞ This word is pronounced exactly like the noun yard, preceded by hard g, nearly as egg-yard. The same sound of y consonant is observable between hard g and a in other words. Nor is this a fanciful peculiarity, but a pronunciation arising from euphony and the analogy of the language, 160.
GUARDAGE, gyård-dåje, s. 90. State of wardship.
GUARDER, gyård-dūr, s. 98. One who guards.
GUARDIAN, gyård-dē-ān, or gyård-jē-ān, s. 293, 294. 376. One that has the care of an orphan; one to whom the care and preservation of any thing is committed.

GUBERNATION, gū-bēr-nā-shūn, s. Government, superintendency.
GUDGEON, gūd-jūn, s. 259. A small fish found in brooks and rivers; a person easily imposed on; something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage.
GUERDON, gēr-dāu, s. 166. 560. A reward, a recompense.
 ☞ I have differed from Mr. Sheridan in the first syllable of this word, which he spells guer. I have made the v mute, as in guess, not only as agreeable to the French guerdon, but to our own analogy. The authority of Mr. Nares confirms me in my opinion. Ben Jonson, indeed, classes the gu in this word with the same letters in anguish; but as these letters are not accented in the last word, the analogy is different, and the sound I have given remains still more agreeable to rule.
To GUESS, gēs, v. n. 336. To conjecture, to judge without any certain principles of judgment; to conjecture rightly.
To GUESS, gēs, v. a. To hit upon by accident.
GUESS, gēs, s. 560. Conjecture, judgment without any positive or certain grounds.

To GUGGLE, gūg-gl, v. a. 405. To sound as water running with intermissions out of a narrow vessel.
GUACUM, gwē-ā-kūm, s. An improper spelling and pronunciation of Guaiaecum, which see.
GUIDAGE, gyl-dåje, s. 90. The reward given to a guide.
GUIDANCE, gyl-dānse, s. Direction, government.
To GUIDE, gyilde, v. a. 160. To direct; to govern by counsel, to instruct; to regulate, to superintend.
GUIDE, gyilde, s. One who directs another in his way; one who directs another in his conduct; director, regulator.

 ☞ As the g is hard in this word and its compounds, it is not easy to spell them as they are pronounced; y must be considered as double e, and must articulate the succeeding vowel as much as in yield.—See Guard.
GUIDELESS, gyilde-lēs, a. Without a guide.
GUIDER, gyil-dūr, s. 98. Director, regulator, guide.
GUILD, gild, s. 341. A society, a corporation, fraternity.

GUILER, gyile-dūr, s. One that betrays into danger by insidious practices.
GUILT, gilt, s. 341. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; a crime, an offence.
 ☞ It is observed in Principles, No. 92. that when g comes before short a, the sound of e so necessarily intervenes that we cannot pronounce these letters without it; but that when the a is long, as in regard, we may pronounce these two letters without the intervention of e, but that this pronunciation is not the most elegant. The same may be observed of the g hard, and the long and short i. We may pronounce guide and guile nearly as if written egg-ide and egg-ile, though not so properly as egg-yide and egg-yile, but gild and guilt must necessarily admit of the e sound between hard g and i, or we cannot pronounce them.
GUILTYLY, gilt-ē-lē, ad. Without innocence.
GUILTYNESS, gilt-ē-nēs, s. The state of being guilty, consciousness of crime.
GUILTLÉSS, gilt-lēs, a. Innocent, free from crime.

GYMNASTICALLY, jîm-nâs'té-kâl-é, ad.

Athletically, fitly for strong exercise.

GYMNASTICK, jîm-nâs'tîk, a. Relating to athletic exercises.

☞ In this word and its relatives we not unfrequently hear the g hard, as in Gimlet, for this learned reason, because they are derived from the Greek. For the very same reason we ought to pronounce the g in Genesis, Geography, Geometry, and a thousand other words, hard, which would essentially alter the sound of our language. Mr. Sheridan has very properly given the soft g to these words; and Mr. Nares is of the same opinion with respect to the propriety of this pronunciation, but doubts of the usage; there can be no doubt, however, of the absurdity of this usage, and of the necessity of curbing it as much as possible.—See Principles, No. 350.

GYMNICK, jîm'nîk, a. Such as practise the athletic or gymnastick exercises.

GYMNOSPERMOUS, jîm-nô-spér'mûs, a. Having the seeds naked.

GYRE, jlre, s. A circle described by any thing going in an orbit.

GYVES, jlvs, s. Fetters, chains for the legs.

☞ Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Scott make the g in this word hard; but Mr. Elphinston, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Pery, with more propriety, make it soft as I have marked it. Mr. Nares makes the sound doubtful; but this majority of authorities and agreeableness to analogy have removed my doubts, and made me alter my former opinion.

To GYVE, jlve, v. a. To fetter, to shackle.

H.

HA, hâ, interj. An expression of wonder, surprise, sudden question, or sudden exertion; an expression of laughter, when often repeated.

HALE, hãle, a. Healthy, sound, hearty.
To HALE, hãle, or hãwl, v. a. To drag by force, to pull violently.
 ↪ This word, in familiar language, is corrupted beyond recovery into haul; but solemn speaking still requires the regular sound, rhyming with pale; the other sound would, in this case, be gross and vulgar.—See To Haul.
HALER, hãl'úr, or hãwl'úr, s. 98. He who pulls and hales.
HALF, hãf, s. 78. 401. A moiety, one of two equal parts; it sometimes has a plural signification when a number is divided.

To HALLOO, hâl-lôô', v. a. To encourage with shouts; to chase with shouts; to call or shout to.

To HALLOW, hâl-lô, v. a. To consecrate, to make holy; to reverence as holy, as, Hallowed be thy name! ↳ In pronouncing the Lord's Prayer, we sometimes hear the participle of this word pronounced like that of the word Hollow. This arises from not attending to the distinction made by syllabication between the single and double l: the double l in the same syllable deepens the a to the broadest sound, as in fall; but when one of the l's is carried off to the next syllable, the a has its short and slender sound, as fallow; the same may be observed of hall and hallow, &c.—See Principles, No. 83.

HALLUCINATION, hâl-lô-sê-nâ-shûn, s. Error, blunder, mistake.

HALM, hâwm, s. Straw.

↳ This is Dr. Johnson's pronunciation of this word.

HAMMERCLOTH, hâm-mûr-klôth, s. The cloth upon the seat of the coach-box.

↳ A critic in the Gentleman's Magazine gives the following etymology of this word, which we do not find in any of our dictionaries:

"When coaches and chariots were first introduced, our frugal ancestors used to load the carriage with provisions for the family when they came to London. The hammer, covered with a cloth, was a convenient repository, and a seat for the coachman. This was afterwards converted into a box. Hammer-cloth is therefore very probably a corruption of hammer-cloth."

If the derivation of this word were worth spending a thought upon, I should think, that as the seat of the coachman is not boarded, but slung like a hammock, the word is rather a corruption of hammock-cloth.

To HAMMER, hâm-mûr, v. a. To beat with a hammer; to forge or form with a hammer; to work in the mind, to contrive by intellectual labour.

HARVESTMAN, hárv-ést-mán, s. A labourer in harvest.

HAS, ház, s. The third person singular of the verb To have.

☞ There is some reason in the custom adopted by the profound and ingenious author of the Philosophy of Rhetoric, where he makes the third persons of verus end in th, when the succeeding word begins with s, to avoid the want of distinction between the final and initial s, and he giveth several examples of this: but this is only avoiding in one instance what cannot be avoided in a thousand; and as the hisping sound is not the most respectable part of our language, and requires more effort than the simple hiss, it may, except in very solemn language, be very well laid aside.

To HASH, hásh, v. a. To mince, to chop into small pieces and mingle.

HASLET, há-s-lét, } s.

HAUGH, hâw, s. A little meadow lying in a valley.

↪ This word, though for ages obsolete, or heard only in the proper names of Fetherstonehaugh, Philiphough,

&c. seems to have risen from the dead in the late whimsical deception we meet with in some gardens where we are suddenly stopped by a deep valley wholly imperceptible till we come to the edge of it. The expression of surprise, Hah! Hah! which generally breaks out upon a discovery of the deception, is commonly supposed to be the origin of this word.

HAUNCH, hâush, s. 214. The thigh, the hind hip; the rear, the hind part.

To HAUNT, hânt, v. a. To frequent, to be much about any place or person; it is used frequently in an ill sense of one that comes unwelcome; it is eminently used of apparitions.

↪ This word was in quiet possession of its true sound till a late dramatick piece made its appearance, which, to the surprise of those who had heard the language spoken half a century, was, by some speakers, called the Haunted Tœcer. This was certainly the improvement of some critic in the language; for a plain common speaker would undoubtedly have pronounced the au, as in ant, tant, &c. and as it had always been pronounced in the Drummer, or the Haunted House. That this pronunciation is agreeable to analogy, see Principles, No. 214.

To HAUNT, hânt, v. n. To be much about, to appear frequently.

HAUNT, hânt, s. Place in which one is frequently found; habit of being in a certain place.

HEARD, hêrd, 234. The pret. of To Hear.

☞ We frequently hear this word pronounced so as to rhyme with feared. But if this were the true sound, it ought to be written heard, and considered as regular; the short sound like herd is certainly the true pronunciation, and the verb is irregular. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, Mr. Smith, and W. Johnston, mark the word as I have done.

HEARER, hêre'ûr, s. 98. One who attends to any doctrine or discourse.

HEARING, hêre'îng, s. The sense by which sounds are perceived; audience; judicial trial; reach of the ear.

HEARTH, hârt'h, s. 243. The pavement of a room where a fire is made.

↳ Till I had inspected the Dictionaries, I could not conceive there were two pronunciations of this word; but now I find that Mr. Elphinston, W. Johnston, and Buchanan, sound the diphthong as in earth and dearth; while Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, and Mr. Barclay, give it as I have done.

HEARTILY, hârt'-tê-lê, ad. Sincerely, actively, diligently, vigorously; from the heart, fully; eagerly, with desire.

HEARTINESS, hârt'-tê-nês, s. Sincerity, freedom from hypocrisy; vigour, diligence, strength.

HEBRAIST, hêb'rá-íst, s. 503. A man skilled in Hebrew.

☞ I have differed from Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Perry, in the quantity of the first syllable of this and the preceding word, and think I am not only authorised by analogy, but the best usage. It may be observed, that there is not a more uniform analogy in the language, than that of shortening the first syllable of a primitive of three syllables with the accent on the first, 503, b.

HEBRICIAN, hê-brish'ân, s. One skilful in Hebrew.

HECATOMB, hêk'á-tôóm, s. A sacrifice of an hundred cattle.

HEGIRA, hê-l'rá, or hêd'jê-rá, s. A term in chronology, signifying the epocha, or account of time, used by the Arabians, who begin from the day that Mahomet was forced to escape from Mecca, July sixteenth, A. D. six hundred and twenty-two.

☞ The latter pronunciation is adopted by Dr. Johnson, Barclay, and Bailey; and the former by Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Perry. The latter, I am informed, is the pronunciation of Oriental scholars, though the former is not only more agreeable to the ear, but seems to fall in with those Arabic Spanish names, Ramirez, Amira, &c. as well as the Grecian, Tauchira, Thyatira, Dejanira, &c.

HEIFER, hêf'úr, s. 98. 254. A young cow.

HEIGHHO, hê'hô, interj. An expression of slight languor and uneasiness.

HEIGHT, hête, or hâte, s. 253. Elevation above the ground; degree of altitude; summit, ascent, towering eminence; elevation of rank; the utmost degree, utmost exertion; state of excellence; advance towards perfection.

☞ The first of these modes is the most general; and the last, the most agreeable to the spelling. Milton was the patron of the first, and, in his zeal for analogy, as Dr. Johnson says, spelt the word height. This is still the pronunciation of the vulgar, and seems at first sight the most agreeable to analogy; but though the sound of the adjective high is generally preserved in the abstract height, the h is always placed before the t, and is perfectly mute. Mr. Garrick's pronunciation (and which is certainly the best) was hite.—See Drought.

To HEIGHTEN, hê'tn, v. a. 103. To raise higher; to improve, to meliorate; to aggravate; to improve by decorations.

HEINOUS, hê'nús, a. 249. Atrocious, wicked in a high degree.

☞ Mr. Sheridan gives the long sound of e to the first syllable of this word, contrary to every Dictionary, to analogy, and, I think, the best usage; which, if I am not mistaken, always gives the first syllable of this word the sound of slender a. That this was the sound of this syllable formerly, we may gather from the spelling of it: for in Charles the Second's time, Mr. Baxter is accused by Mr. Danvers of publishing the hainous charge against the Baptists of baptizing naked.

HEINOUSLY, hê'nús-lê, ad. Atrociously, wickedly.

HEINOUSNESS, hê'nús-nês, s. Atrociousness, wickedness.

HEIR, áre, s. 249. 394. One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.

HEREDITABLE, hê-red²-ê-tâ-bl, a. Whatever may be occupied as inheritance.
HEREDITAMENT, hêr²-ê-dit²-â-mênt, s. A law term denoting inheritance.
 Dr. Johnson and Mr. Barclay place the accent on the first syllable of this word; Dr. Ash, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Entick, on the second; and Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, and Bailey, on the third. The last accentuation is not only most agreeable to the best usage, and the most grateful to the ear, but seems to accord better with the secondary accent of the latter Latin Hereditamenta.—See Academy.
HEREDITARY, hê-red²-ê-tâ-rê, a. Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.
HEREDITARILY, hê-red²-ê-tâ-rê-lê, ad. By inheritance.

HEST, hêst, s. Command, precept, injunction.
HETEROCLITE, hêt²-êr-ò-kilte, s. 156. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension; any thing or person deviating from the common rule.
 Dr. Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, Mr. Perry Buchanan, Barclay, and Bailey, unite in placing the accent on the first syllable of this word; Entick alone places it on the third. Mr. Sheridan and Buchanan place an accent also on the last syllable, and make the i long; while Dr. Kenrick and Mr. Perry make it short. That the accent ought to be on the first syllable cannot be doubted, when we consider how uniformly we remove the accent higher when we anglicise Latin words by shortening them: and though the i in these terminations is rather ambiguous, 156, it certainly inclines to the long sound which Mr. Sheridan and Buchanan have given it.—See Academy and Incomparable.
HETEROCLITICAL, hêt²-êr-ò-klit²-ê-kál, a. Deviating from the common rule.
HETERODOX, hêt²-êr-ò-dòks, a. Deviating from the established opinion, not orthodox.
HETEROGENEAL, hêt²-êr-ò-jêl-nê-ál, a. Not of the same nature, not kindred.
HETEROGENEITY, hêt²-êr-ò-jêl-nê-lê-tê, s. Opposition of nature, contrariety of qualities, opposite or dissimilar part.
HETEROGENEOUS, hêt²-êr-ò-jêl-nê-ús, a. Not kindred, opposite or dissimilar in nature.

↪ 559. Fåts 73, får 77, fall 83, fât 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pline 103, pin 107—nô 162, môve 164

↪ There is an affected pronunciation of this and the two preceding words, which, contrary to our own analogy, preserves the g hard. The plea is, that these words are derived from the Greek, which always preserved the gamma hard. To produce this reason, is to expose it. What would become of our language, if every word from the Greek and Latin, that has g in it, were so pronounced? What is most to be regretted is, that men of learning sometimes join in these pedantick deviations, which are only worthy of the lowest order of critical coxcombs.—See Gymnastick.

To HEW, hû, v. a. Part. Hewn or Hewed. To cut with an edged instrument, to hack; to chop, to cut; to fell as with an axe; to form a shape with an axe; to form laboriously.

HIBERNAL, hî-bêr'nâl, a. Belonging to the winter.

HICCOUGH, hîk'kûp, or hîk'kôf, s. A convulsion of the stomach producing sobs.

↪ This is one of those words which seem to have been corrupted by a laudable intention of bringing them nearer to their original. The convulsive sob was supposed to be a species of cough; but neither Junius nor Skinner mention any such derivation, and both suppose it formed from the sound it occasions. Accordingly we find, though hiccough is the most general orthography, hiccup is the most usual pronunciation. Thus Butler,

"Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
"Is to forbid my pulse to move;
"My beard to grow, my ears to prisk up,
"Or, when I'm in the fit, to hiccup."

To HICCOUGH, hîk'kûp, v. n. To sob with convulsion of the stomach.

To HICUP, hîk'kûp, v. n. To sob with a convulsed stomach.

HIGHLAND, hî'lând, s. Mountainous region.

HIGHLANDER, hî'lând-ûr, s. An inhabitant of mountains.

↪ We sometimes hear a most absurd pronunciation of this word taken from the Scotch, as if written Healand-er. It is curious to observe, that while the Scotch are endeavouring to leave their own pronunciation, and adopt that of the English, there are some English so capricious as to quit their own pronunciation, and adopt that which the Scotch strive carefully to avoid.

HOGSHEAD, hōgz'hêd, s. A measure of liquids containing sixty gallons; any large barrel.

↪ This word is sometimes pronounced as if written hog-shed; if Dr. Johnson's derivation of this word from hog and head be a true one, this pronunciation is certainly wrong, and arises from the junction of the letters s and h in printing, which may be presumed to have occasioned a similar mispronunciation in household and falsehood, which see. Junius derives this word from the Belgick Ockshood, ogshood, or hockshoot. Mioshew says, Skinner derives it from Ockshood and Ogshood; but he himself is of opinion, that it rather comes from the Latin Orca, a great sea-fish, an enemy to the whale, and the Belgick hoofd, as much as to say, Ork's hoofd; that is, Orca caput, an Ork's head.

☞ This word, and its companion favour, the two servile attendants on cards and notes of fashion, have so generally dropped the u, that to spell these words with that letter is looked upon as gauche and rustick in the extreme. In vain did Dr. Johnson enter his protest against the innovation; in vain did he tell us, that the sound of the word required the u, as well as its derivation from the Latin through the French; the sentence seems to have been passed, and we now hardly ever find these words with this vowel but in our Dictionaries. But though I am a declared enemy to all needless innovation, I see no inconvenience in spelling these words in the fashionable manner; there is no reason for preserving the u in honour and favour, there is no reason for the preservation of the same letter in error, author, and a hundred others: and with respect to the pronunciation of these words without the u, while we have so many words where the o sounds u, even when the accent is on it, as honey, money, &c. we need not be in much pain for the sound of u in words of this termination, where the final r brings all the unaccented vowels to the same level; that is, to the short sound of u.—See Principles, No. 418.

HORDE, hórde, s. A clan, a migratory crew of people; a body of Tartars.

HORIZON, hó-rí-zón, s. 503. The line that terminates the view.

☞ This word was, till of late years, universally pronounced, in prose, with the accent on the first syllable; and Shakespeare, says Dr. Johnson, has improperly placed it so in verse:

"..... When the morning sun shall raise his car
"Above the borders of this horizon,
"We'll forwards towards Warwick and his mates."

With respect to the propriety of this pronunciation it may be observed, that there is scarcely any thing more agreeable to the genuine analogy of English orthoëpy, than placing the accent on the first syllable of a trisyllable, when the middle syllable does not end with a consonant, 503. But another rule almost as constantly counteracts this analogy: when the word is perfectly Latin or Greek, and the accent is on the penultimate, then we generally follow the accentuation of those languages. Poets have so universally placed the accent on the second syllable of this word, and this pronunciation has so classical an air as to render the other accentuation vulgar.

HYDRAULICKS, hl-drâw-lîks, s. 187. The science of conveying water through pipes or conduits.
HYDROCELE, hl-drô-séle, s. 180. A watery rupture.
 ↗ This word, like all of the same origin and form, as Bubonocœle, Enterocœle, Bronchoœle, Spermatoœle, Sarcoœle, &c. ought to be pronounced with the e final forming a syllable; for as they are perfectly Greek words, as ὕδρωσις, or formed from the Greek, as Enterocœle from ἔντερον and κῆλις, they ought to be pronounced like apostrophe, hyperbole, &c. The reason that Diastyle and Osteocœle are not pronounced so as to make the final e and the preceding consonant form a distinct syllable, is, that they are not perfectly Greek words, but formed from ἄλ and στέλος; and ὀστίον and κῆλις; where we find the Greek termination altered.
HYDROCEPHALUS, hl-drô-sêl-fâ-lûs, s. A dropsy in the head.
HYDROGEN, hl-drô-jên, s. A chymical principle generating water.—See Oxygen.
HYDROGRAPHER, hl-drôg-grâ-fûr, s. One who draws maps of the sea.
HYDROGRAPHY, hl-drôg-grâ-fê, s. 518. Description of the watery part of the terraqueous globe.
HYDROMANCY, hl-drô-mân-sé, s. 519.
 Prediction by water.
HYDROMEL, hl-drô-mêl, s. 180.
 Honey and water.
HYDROMETER, hl-drôm-mê-tûr, s. 518. An instrument to measure the extent of water.
HYDROMETRY, hl-drôm-mê-trê, s. The act of measuring the extent of water.
HYDROPHOBIA, hl-drô-fô-bé-â, s. Dread of water.
 ↗ I have differed from Mr. Sheridan in the accentuation of this word; for my reason, see Cyclopædia. Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Entick, Mr. Barclay, and Dr. Johnson, are uniformly for the antepenultimate accent.
HYDROPICAL, hl-drôp-pê-kâl, } a.
HYDROPICK, hl-drôp-pîk, }
 Dropsical, diseased with extravasated water.
HYDROSTATICAL, hl-drô-stât-ê-kâl, a. Relating to hydrostatics, taught by hydrostatics.
HYDROSTATICALLY, hl-drô-stât-ê-kâl-ê, ad.
 According to hydrostatics.
HYDROSTATICKS, hl-drô-stât-ê-ks, s. The science of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.

HYDROTICKS, hl-drôt-ê-ks, s. Purgers of water or phlegm.
HYEMAL, hl-ê-mâl, a. Belonging to winter.
HYEN, hl-ên, } s. An animal like a wolf.
HYENA, hl-ê-nâ, }
HYGROMETER, hl-grôm-mê-tûr, s. 187. An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.
HYGROSCOPE, hl-grô-skôpe, s. An instrument to show the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme.
HYM, hîm, s. A species of dog.
HYMEN, hl-mên, s. The god of marriage; the virginal membrane.
HYMENEAL, hl-mê-nê-âl, } s. A marriage song.
HYMENEAN, hl-mê-nê-ân, }
HYMENEAL, hl-mê-nê-âl, } a.
HYMENEAN, hl-mê-nê-ân, }
 Pertaining to marriage.
 ↗ In these compounds of Hymen, Mr. Sheridan has shortened the i in the first syllable; but though I think this tendency of the secondary accent to shorten the vowel perfectly agreeable to analogy, yet y has so frequently the sound of long i, that it seems, in this case and some others, to counteract that tendency, nor can any other reason be given why the same letter in hyperbolic and hypercritick should be long as Mr. Sheridan has properly marked them. Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Buchanan, and Mr. Perry, by their notation, seem of the same opinion.
HYMN, hîm, s. An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superior being.
To HYMN, hîm, v. a. To praise in song, to worship with hymns.
To HYMN, hîm, v. n. To sing songs of adoration.
HYMNICK, hîm-nîk, a. Relating to hymns.
HYMNING, hîm-nîng, part. a. 411. Celebrating in hymns.
To HYP, hîp, v. a. To make melancholy, to dispirit.
HYPALLAGE, hê-pâl-lâ-jê, s. A figure by which words change their cases with each other.
HYPER, hl-pûr, s. Injudiciously used by Prior for a hypercritick.
HYPERBOLA, hl-pêr-bô-lâ, s. 187. A term in mathematicks.
HYPERBOLE, hl-pêr-bô-lê, s. 187. A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth.
 ↗ None of our orthoëpists but Dr. Johnson accent this word on the first syllable; and that he should do so is the more surprising, as all his poetical authorities adopt a different pronunciation:
 "Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,
 "Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules controll'd."
Granville
HYPERBOLICAL, hl-pêr-bô-lê-kâl, } a.
HYPERBOLICK, hl-pêr-bô-lîk, }

HYPOGASTRICK, hîp-ô-gâs'trîk, a. Seated in the lower part of the belly.

HYPOGEUM, hîp-ô-jê-ûm, s. 512. A name which the ancient architects gave to cellars and vaults.

HYPOSTASIS, hî-pôs-tâ-sîs, s. 187. Distinct substance; personality, a term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

HYPOSTATICAL, hî-pô-stât'ê-kâl, a. Constitutive, constituent as distinct ingredients; personal, distinctly personal.

HYPOTENUSE, hî-pôt-ê-nûse, s. 187. The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle, the subtense.

Mr. Sheridan and Dr. Ash accent this word on the second syllable; but Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Barclay, Bailey, and Buchanan, on the last. These authorities induced me, in the first edition of this Dictionary, to place the accent on the last syllable; but, upon farther inquiry, I found the best usage decidedly in favour of the antepenultimate accent; and as the secondary accent is on the second syllable of the Latin Hypotenusa, this accentuation seems most agreeable to analogy.—See Academy and Incomparable.

HYPOTHESIS, hîp-pôth-ê-sîs, or hî-pôth-ê-sîs, s. 187. A supposition, a system formed under some principle not proved.

HYPOTHETICAL, hî-pô-thêt'ê-tê-kâl, 187. } a.

HYPOTHETICK, hî-pô-thêt'ê-tîk, 187. }

Including a supposition, conditional.

HYPOTHETICALLY, hî-pô-thêt'ê-tê-kâl-ê, ad. 187. Upon supposition, conditionally.

HYSSOP, hîz-zûp, or hî-sûp, s. A plant. It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in Scripture.

Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Entick, W. Johnston, and Buchanan, pronounce this word in the second manner; Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, and Mr. Perry, in the first. To pronounce the y long before double s is contrary to every rule of orthoëpy; and therefore as the first mode is undoubtedly the best, the other ought to be relinquished.

HYSTERICAL, hîs-têr'ê-kâl, } a.

HYSTERICK, hîs-têr'ê-k, 509. }

Troubled with fits, disordered in the regions of the womb; proceeding from disorders in the womb.

HYSTERICKS, hîs-têr'ê-k, s. Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

It may be remarked, that the frequent use of this letter in our old dramatick writers instead of ay, is a proof that our ancestors pronounced I much broader than we do at present, and somewhat approaching to the sound it has at this day in the north of England.—See Directions to Foreigners prefixed to this Dictionary.

To JABBER, jâb'bur, v. n. 98. To talk idly without thinking; to chatter.

JABBERER, jâb'bur-êr, s. One who talks in articulately or unintelligibly.

JACENT, jâ'sênt, a. Lying at length.

JACINTH, jâ-sînth, s. The same with hyacinth, a precious stone.

JACK, jâk, s. The diminutive of John; the name of instruments which supply the place of a boy, as an instrument to pull off boots; an engine which turns the spit; a young pike; a cup of waxed leather; a small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers; a part of the musical instrument called a virginal; the male of some animals; a support to saw wood; the colours or ensign of a ship; a cunning fellow.

JACK-WITH-A-LANTERN, jâk-wîth-â-lân'tûrn, s. An ignis fatuus.

JACKALENT, jâk-â-lênt, s. A simple sheepish fellow.

JACKALL, jâk-kâl, s. 406. A small animal supposed to start prey for the lion.

Mr. Nares, who is an excellent judge both of analogy and usage, says, the accentuation of this word upon the last syllable is adopted by Dr. Johnson; but it is certainly now obsolete. I am reluctantly of a different opinion, and think Dryden's accentuation the best:

“Close by their fire-ships like Jackalls appear,
“Who on their lions for their prey attend.”

JACKANAPES, jâk-ân-âps, s. A monkey, an ape; a coxcomb, an impertinent.

JACKDAW, jâk-dâw, s. A small species of crow.

JACKET, jâk'kî't, s. 99. A short coat, a close waistcoat.

JACOBIN, jâk'ô-bin, s. 149. A monk of a particular order.

JAILBIRD, jâle'bûrd, s. One who has been in a jail.

JAILER, jâ'lûr, s. The keeper of a prison.

JAKES, jâks, s. A house of office, a privy.

JALAP, jâl'âp, s. A purgative root.

The pronunciation of this word, as if written Jollop, which Mr. Sheridan has adopted, is, in my opinion, now confined to the illiterate and vulgar.

JAM, jâm, s. A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

I.

I, I, pron. pers. Oblique case Me. Plural We. Oblique case Us. The pronoun of the first person, Myself; I is more than once, in Shakespeare, (and Dr. Johnson might have added, very often, in Beaumont and Fletcher) written for ay or yes. Nay, Ben Johnson, in his grammar, makes this letter an adverb of affirmation.—See Principles, No. 8. 105. 185

JAMB, jâm, s. Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

↳ This ought to have been added to the catalogue of words having the b silent.—See Principles, No. 347.

To JANGLE, jângl-g, v. n. 405. To quarrel, to bicker in words.

JANGLER, jângl-g-ûr, s. - A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

JANIZARY, jân-né-zâr-é, s. One of the guards of the Turkish Sultan.

JANTY, jân-té, a. Showy, fluttering.

↳ It is highly probable, that, when this word was first adopted, it was pronounced as close to the French gentil as possible; but as we have no letter in our language equivalent to the French soft g, and as the nasal vowel en, when not followed by hard g, c, or k, is not to be pronounced by a mere English speaker (see Encore), it is no wonder that the word was anglicised in its sound, as well as in its orthography. Mr. Sheridan has preserved the French sound of the vowel in this word and its compound jauntiness, as if written jaenty and jauntiness; but Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Perry, give the a the Italian sound, as heard in uncle, father, &c. and this, I imagine, it ought to have, 214.

JANUARY, jân-nû-âr-é, s. The first month of the year.

JAPAN, jâ-pân, s. Work varnished and raised in gold and colours.

IDONEOUS, í-dô-né-ús, a. Fit, proper, convenient.

IDYL, í-díl, s. A small short poem; in the pastoral style, an eclogue.

→ As there is sometimes an erroneous pronunciation of this word, by making the i short as in the first syllable of idiot, I have thought it necessary to quote the authorities for pronouncing it long as in idle; namely, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, and Entick. Dr. Ash, Barclay, and Fenning, do not distinguish it by the position of the accent from the first t in idiot; and Dr. Kenrick, as is usual with him when any difficulty occurs, does not mark it or divide it into syllables. But the authorities I have produced are sufficient to vindicate the long sound of i, without recurring to the diphthong in the original ἰδύλλιον, as the Greek and Latin quantities are very uncertain and fallacious guides to the quantity of English words.—See Principles, No. 543, 545, &c.

JEALOUS, jêl'ús, a. 234. 314. Suspicious in love; emulous; zealously cautious against dishonour; suspiciously vigilant; suspiciously fearful.

ILLITERACY, îl-lî-têr-â-sê, s. Illiterateness, want of learning.

☞ I have adopted this word from the learned and ingenious Dr. Farmer, in his Essay on the Learning of Shakespeare, who, by his printing it in italics, seems to use it with timidity; but in nothing is the old English proverb, store is no sore, better verified than in words. Poetry will find employment for a thousand words not used in prose, and a nice discernment will scarcely find any words entirely useless that are not quite obsolete.

ILLITERATE, îl-lî-têr-âte, a. 91. Unlettered, untaught, unlearned.
ILLITERATENESS, îl-lî-têr-ât-nês, s. Want of learning, ignorance of science.

IMAGINER, é-mâd²-jin-âr, s. 98. One who forms ideas.

IMBECILE, ðm-bés-síl, or ðm-bé-séél, a. 140. 112. Weak, feeble, wanting strength of either mind or body.

↪ Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, and Entick, accent this word on the second syllable, as in the Latin imbécilis; but Mr. Scott and Mr. Sheridan on the last; as in the French imbécille. The latter is, in my opinion, the more fashionable, but the former more analogical. We have too many of these French sounding words; and if the number cannot be diminished, they should, at least, not be suffered to increase.

↪ This word, says Dr. Johnson, is corruptly written embezzle. This corruption, however, is too well established to be altered; and as it is appropriated to a particular species of deficiency, the corruption is less to be regretted.

- To IMPORT, ïm-pört, v. a. 492. To carry into any country from abroad; to imply, to infer; to produce in consequence; to be of moment.
- IMPORT, ïm-pört, s. Importance, moment, consequence; tendency; any thing imported from abroad.
- ↳ This substantive was formerly pronounced with the accent on the second syllable, but has of late years adopted the accent on the first, and classes with the general distinction of dissyllable nouns and verbs of the same form.—See Principles, No. 492.
- IMPORTANCE, ïm-pör-tânse, or ïm-pör-tânse, s. Thing imported or implied; matter, subject; consequence, moment; importunity.
- IMPORTANT, ïm-pör-tânt, or ïm-pör-tânt, a. Momentous, weighty, of great consequence.
- ↳ The second syllable of this and the foregoing word is frequently pronounced as in the verb to import. The best usage, however, is on the side of the first pronunciation, which seems to suppose that it is not a word formed from import, but an adoption of the French importance, and therefore it ought not to be pronounced as a compound, but as a simple. The authorities for this pronunciation are, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, and Mr. Buchanan. Mr. Scott is for either, but gives the first the preference.
- IMPORTATION, ïm-pör-tâ-shûn, s. The act or practice of importing, or bringing into a country from abroad.
- IMPORTER, ïm-pört-ür, s. 98. One that brings in any thing from abroad.

⇨ 559. Fåte 73, fār 77, fäll 83, fāt 81—mē 93, mēt 95—pine 105, pīn 107—nó 162, mōve 164,

To IMPOUND, im-pōūd', v. a. To enclose as in a pound, to shut in, to confine; to shut up in a fold.

IMPRACTICABILITY, im-prāk-tē-kā-bl'ē-tē, s. Impossibility, the state of being not feasible.

⇨ This word is not in Johnson, but I insert it on his own authority: for though it is not in his vocabulary, he has used it to explain the word impossibility. But the very current use of this word would be a sufficient authority for it, as its synonyme Impracticableness, from the necessity of placing the accent high, is so difficult of pronunciation, and so inferior in sound, as to leave no doubt to which we should give the preference.

IMPRACTICABLE, im-prāk-tē-kā-bl, a. Not to be performed, unfeasible, impossible; untractable, unmanageable.

IMPRACTICABLENESS, im-prāk-tē-kā-bl-nēs, s. Impossibility.

IMPUDENTLY, im-pū-dēt-lē, ad. Shamelessly, without modesty.

To IMPUGN, im-pūnē, v. a. 386. To attack, to assault.

⇨ Notwithstanding the clear analogy there is for pronouncing this word in the manner it is marked, there is a repugnance at leaving out the g, which nothing but frequent use will take away. If sign were in as little use as impugn, we should feel the same repugnance at pronouncing it in the manner we do. But as language is association, no wonder association should have such power over it.—For the analogies that lead us to this pronunciation, see Principles, No. 585.

Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Scott, pronounce the word as I have marked it; that is, with the g silent, and the z long; but Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry, and Buchanan, though they suppress the g, pronounce the z short. That this short sound is contrary to analogy cannot be doubted, when we take a view of the words of this termination; and the only plea for it, is the short sound of the vowels before gm in phlegm, diaphragm, parapegm, apophthegm, and paradigm, 399: but as the accent is not on any of these syllables, except phlegm, which is irregular, 399, it is no wonder the vowel should shorten in these words, as it so frequently does in the numerous terminations in ile, ine, ite, &c. 147.

IMPUGNER, im-pû-nûr, s. One that attacks or invades.

↳ In judging of the propriety of this pronunciation, we must not confound the participles impugning, impugned, and the verbal noun impugner, with such words as we do not form ourselves, as repugnant, malignant, &c. The former are mere branches of the verb impugn, and therefore make no alteration in the root; the latter we receive already formed from the Latin or the French, and pronounce the g as we do in signify and signet, though it is silent in signed, signing, or signer. For it must be carefully observed, that the analogy of pronunciation admits of no alteration in the sound of the verb, upon its being formed into a participle or verbal noun; nor in the sound of the adjective, upon its acquiring a comparative or superlative termination.—See Principles, No. 409.

IMPUSSANCE, im-pû-'is-sânse, s. Impotence, inability, weakness, feebleness.—See Puissance.

IMPULSE, im-pûlse, s. Communicated force, the effect of one body acting upon another; influence acting upon the mind, motive, idea.

INACTIVITY, in-âk-tiv-lé-té, s. Idleness, rest, sluggishness.

INADEQUACY, in-âd-é-kwâ-sé, s. The state of being unequal to some purpose.

↳ The frequent use of this word in parliament, and its being adopted by some good writers, made me esteem it not unworthy of a place here; though I have not met with it in any other Dictionary. The word inadequateness, which is equivalent to it, is not in Johnson; but there seems a repugnance in writers and speakers to abstracts formed by ness, if it is possible to find one of another termination; and to this repugnance we owe the currency of this word.

INADEQUATE, in-âd-é-kwâte, a. 91. Not equal to the purpose, defective.

INADEQUATELY, in-âd-é-kwâte-lé, ad. Defectively, not completely.

INADVERTENCY, in-âd-vert-é-ténse, } s.

Carelessness, negligence, inattention; act or effect of negligence.

INADVERTENT, in-âd-vert-é-tént, a. Negligent, careless.

INADVERTENTLY, in-âd-vert-é-tént-lé, ad. Carelessly, negligently.

INCAPABLE, in-kâ-pâ-bl, a. 405. Wanting power, wanting understanding, unable to comprehend, learn, or understand; not able to receive any thing; unable, not equal to any thing; disqualified by law.

↳ As Placable and Implacable seem to follow the Latin quantity in the antepenultimate a, so Capable and Incapable, if we derive them from Capax and Incapax, reject it: but the most natural derivation of these words is from the French Capable and Incapable. Some speakers, however, make the a short in all; but this is a provincial pronunciation that must be carefully avoided.—See Placable.

INCAPACIOUS, in-kâ-pâ-shûs, a. Narrow, of small content.

INCAPACIOUSNESS, in-kâ-pâ-shûs-nês, s. Narrowness, want of containing space.

To INCARNATE, in-kâr-nâte, v. a. To clothe with flesh, to embody with flesh.

INCARNATE, in-kâr-nâte, part. a. 91. Clothed with flesh, embodied with flesh.

INCARNATION, in-kâr-nâ-shûn, s. The act of assuming body; the state of breeding flesh.

INCARNATIVE, in-kâr-nâ-tîv, s. 512. A medicine that generates flesh.

To INCASE, in-kâsê, v. a. To cover, to enclose, to wrap.

INCAUTIOUS, in-kâw-shûs, a. Unwary, negligent, heedless.

INCAUTIOUSLY, in-kâw-shûs-lê, ad. Unwarily, heedlessly, negligently.

INCENDIOUS, in-sên-dê-ûs, a. 294.

↳ I have not met with this word in any Dictionary, and have often regretted being obliged to use the word incendiary as an adjective; but meeting with incendious

In Lord Bacon, when speaking of rebellion, he says, "Because of the infinite evils which it brings on princes and their subjects, it is represented by the horrid image of Typhæus, whose hundred heads are the divided powers, and flourishing jaws incendious designs;" I thought should do a real service to the language by inserting tâ, word.

INCENDIARY, in-sên-dê-â-rê, or in-sên-tjê-â-rê, s. 293. 376. One who sets houses or towns on fire in malice or for robbery; one who inflames faction, or promotes quarrels.

INCLINATORY, ðn-klín-á-túr-é, a. Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

☞ I have differed from Mr. Sheridan in the quantity of the vowel in the second syllable of this word, as well as in Declinatory. My reason is, that the termination atory has a tendency to shorten the preceding vowel, as is evident in Declamatory, Predatory, &c. which have the vowel in the second syllable short, though it is long in the Latin words from which these are derived.

INCLINATORILY, ðn-klín-á-túr-é-lé, ad. Obliquely, with inclination to one side or the other.

To INCLINE, ðn-klíne, v. n. To bend, to lean, to tend towards any part; to be favourably disposed to, to feel desire beginning.

INCOMMUNICATING, ðn-kóm-mú-né-ká-ting, a. Having no intercourse with each other.

INCOMPACT, ðn-kóm-pákt, } a.

INCOMPACTED, ðn-kóm-pákt-éd, } Not joined, not cohering.

INCOMPARABLE, ðn-kóm-pá-rá-bl, a. Excellent above compare, excellent beyond all competition.

☞ This is among some of the words in our language, whose accentuation astonishes foreigners, and sometimes puzzles natives. What can be the reason, say they, that comparable and incomparable have not the same accent as the verb compare. To which it may be answered: One reason is, that the English are fond of appearing in the borrowed robes of other languages; and as comparable and incomparable may possibly be derived from comparabilis and incomparabilis, they seem desirous of laying the stress on the first syllable, both to show their affinity to the Latin words (see Academy) and to distinguish them from the homespun words formed from our own verb. When this distinction is once adopted, the mind, which is always labouring to express its ideas distinctly and forcibly, finds a sort of propriety in annexing different ideas to the different accentuation; and thus the distinction seems to be not without reason. If we may Compare

559. Fáté 73, fár 77, fáll 83, fát 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pline 105, pin 107—nô 162, môve 164, small things with great, it may be observed, that the evils of language, like other evils in nature, produce some good. But it may be likewise observed, that producing different meanings, by a different accentuation of words, is but a bungling way of promoting the copiousness of languages, and ought as much as possible to be discouraged; especially when it adds to the difficulty, and takes away from the harmony of pronunciation. Besides, there is a petty criticism which always induces coxcombs in pronunciation to carry these distinctions farther than they ought to go. Not content with accenting acceptable, admirable, commendable, comparable, la-mentable, &c. on the first syllable, which implies not a mere capacity of being accepted, admired, &c. but a worthiness of being accepted, admired, &c.: corruptible, and susceptible are sometimes accented in this manner, without the least necessity from a difference of signification. In short, all these refinements in language, which are difficult to be understood, and productive of perplexity, ought to be considered rather as evils than advantages, and to be restrained within as narrow bounds as possible.—See Bowl.

INCOMPARABLY, in-kôm-pâ-râ-blê, ad. Beyond comparison, without competition; excellently, to the highest degree.

INCOMPASSIONATE, in-kôm-pâsh'ân-âte, a. 91. Void of pity.

INDECLINABLE, in-dé-kill'nâ-bl, a. Not varied by terminations.
INDECOROUS, in-dé-kô'l'ûs, or in-dék'ô-rûs, a. Indecent, unbecoming.—See Decorous.
 ↗ Nothing can show more with what servility we sometimes follow the Latin accentuation than pronouncing this word with the accent on the penultimate. In the Latin decorus the o is long, and therefore has the accent; but in decorous the o is short, and the accent is consequently removed to the antepenultimate; this alteration of accent obtains likewise when the word is used in English, and this accentuation is perfectly agreeable to our own analogy; but because the Latin adjective indecorous has the penultimate long, and consequently the accent on it, we must desert our own analogy, and servilely follow the Latin accentuation, though that accentuation has no regard to analogy; for why decorous and indecorous, words which have a similar derivation and meaning, should have the penultimate of different quantities, can be resolved into nothing but the caprice of custom; but that so clear an analogy of our own language should be subservient to the capricious usages of the Latin, is a satire upon the good sense and taste of Englishmen. Dr. Ash is the only one who places the accent on the antepenultimate of this word; but what is his single authority though with analogy on his side, to a crowd of excombs vapouring with scraps of Latin!—See Principles, No. 512.
INDECORUM, in-dé-kô'rûm, s. Indecency, something unbecoming.
INDEED, in-dééd', ad. In reality, in truth; above the common rate; this is to be granted that; it is used to note a full concession.

INDEFATIGABLE, in-dé-fât'té-gâ-bl, a. Unwearied, not tired, not exhausted by labour.
INDEFATIGABLY, in-dé-fât'té-gâ-blé, ad. Without weariness.
INDEFECTIBILITY, in-dé-fék-té-bîl'ê-té, s. The quality of suffering no decay, or being subject to no defect.

INDISPUTABLE, in-dis-pû-tâ-bl, or in-dis-pû-tâ-bl, a. Uncontrovertible, incontestable, not to be disputed.—See Disputable.

↳ This word is nearly under the same predicament as Disputable. Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Smith, Buchanan, and Bailey, adopt the last accentuation, and only Mr. Sheridan and Entick the first; and yet my experience and recollection grossly fail me, if this is not the general pronunciation of polite and lettered speakers. Mr. Scott has given both pronunciations; but, by placing this the first, seems to give it the preference.—See Irreparable.

INDISPUTABLENESS, in-dis-pû-tâ-bl-nês, s. The state of being indisputable, certainty.

INDISPUTABLY, in-dis-pû-tâ-blê, ad. Without controversy, certainly; without opposition.

INDISSOLVABLE, in-diz-zôl'-vâ-bl, a. Indissoluble, not separable as to its parts; not to be broken, binding for ever.

INDISTURBANCE, in-dis-tûr'bânse, s. Calmness, freedom from disturbance.

INDIVIDUAL, in-dê-vid'jû-âl, s. A single being, as opposed to the species.

It is somewhat strange that this word as a substantive should not have found its way into Johnson's Dictionary, but not in the least strange that Mr. Sheridan and Dr. Kenrick should omit it.

INDIVIDUAL, in-dê-vid'jû-âl, or in-dê-vid'jû-âl, a. 463. Separate from others of the same species, single, numerically one; undivided, not to be parted or disjoined.

The tendency of d to go into j, when the accent is before, and u after it, is evident in this and the succeeding words.—See Principles, No. 293, 294, 376.

INDIVIDUALITY, in-dê-vid'jû-âl'tê, s. Separate or distinct existence.

INDIVIDUALLY, in-dê-vid'jû-âl-lê, ad. With separate or distinct existence, numerically.

To INDIVIDUATE, in-dê-vid'jû-âte, v. a. To distinguish from others of the same species, to make single.

INDIVIDUATION, in-dê-vid'jû-â'shûn, s. That which makes an individual.

INDIVIDUITY, in-dê-vid'jû-ê-tê, s. The state of being an individual, separate existence.

INDIVISIBILITY, in-dê-vîz'ê-bîl'ê-tê, 552. } s.

INDIVISIBLENESS, in-dê-vîz'ê-bl'nēs, } s.
State in which no more division can be made.

INDIVISIBLE, in-dê-vîz'ê-bl, a. That cannot be broken into parts, so small as that it cannot be smaller.

INDIVISIBLY, in-dê-vîz'ê-blê, ad. So as it cannot be divided.

INDOCIBLE, in-dôs'ê-bl, a. 405. Unteachable, insusceptible of instruction.

INDOCILE, in-dôs'sîl, a. Unteachable, incapable of being instructed.

This word and all its relatives have the o so differently pronounced, by our best orthoepists, that the shortest way to show the difference will be to exhibit them at one view.

We here see the great preponderance of authority for the short sound of o in all these words of three syllables, not because this letter is short in the Latin words whence they are derived; for visibile and visibile, which have the i short with us, are visibilis and visibilis in Latin; but because the accent in our English word is antepenultimate, and because this accent has a shortening power in all words of this form, which may be called simples, 503, unless the antepenultimate vowel be u, and then it is always long, 509, 511, 537. Thus the antepenultimate vowels in credible, claricæ, vesicæ, &c. are short, though derived from credibilis, clâvicula, vesicula, &c. but the a in tamabile, debatable, &c. is long, because they are formatives of our own, from tame, debate, &c.

Why Dr. Johnson should spell indocile without the final e, as we see it in the first and last editions of his Dictionary, cannot be conceived. As well might he have left this letter out in puerile, versatile, and fertile. In this he seems implicitly to have followed the authority of Dr. Bentley, who, however versed in Latin and Greek, has been proved by Dr. Lowth not to be infallible in the Grammar of his own language.

INDOCILITY, in-dô-sîl'ê-tê, s. Unteachableness, refusal of instruction.

To INDOCTRINATE, in-dôk'trê-nâte, v. a. 91, To instruct, to tincture with any science or opinion.

INIMICAL, in-im-é-kál, or in-é-m-é-kál, a.
Hostile, contrary, repugnant.

↳ This word sprung up in the House of Commons about ten years ago, and has since been so much in use as to make us wonder how we did so long without it. It had, indeed, one great recommendation, which was, that it was pronounced in direct opposition to the rules of our own language. An Englishman, who had never heard it pronounced, would, at first sight, have placed the accent on the antepenultimate, and have pronounced the penultimate i short; but the vanity of showing its derivation from the Latin inimicus, where the penultimate i is long; and the very oddity of pronouncing this i long in inimical made this pronunciation fashionable. I know it may be urged, that this word, with respect to sound, was as great an oddity in the Latin language as it is in ours; and that the reason for making the i long was its derivation from amicus. It will be said too, that, in other words, such as aromaticus, tyrannicus, retoricus, &c. the i was only terminational; but in inimicus it was radical, and therefore entitled to the quantity of its original amicus. In answer to this, it may be observed, that this was no reason for placing the accent on that syllable in Latin. In that language, whenever the penultimate syllable was long, whether radical or terminational, it had always the accent on it. Thus the numerous terminations in alis and ator, by having the penultimate a long, had always the accent on that letter, while the i in the terminations itis and itas seldom had the accent, because that vowel was generally short. But allowing for a moment that we ought severely to follow the Latin accent and quantity in words which we derive from that language; this rule, at least, ought to be restricted to such words as have preserved their Latin form, as orator, senator, character, &c. yet in these words we find the Latin penultimate accent entirely neglected, and the English antepenultimate adopted. But if this Latin accent and quantity should extend to words from the Latin that are anglicised, then we ought to pronounce divinity, de-vi-ne-ty; severity, se-vê-re-ty; and urbanity, ur-bâ-ne-ty. In short, the whole language would be metamorphosed, and we should neither pronounce English nor Latin, but a Babylonian dialect between both.

INTENERATION, in-tên-nêr-â-shûn, s. The act of softening or making tender.

INTENIBLE, in-tên-ê-bl, a. 405. That cannot hold.

↳ Dr. Johnson has given this word from Shakespeare, who formed it as if derived from the Latin: but as that language has no nearer relation to it than tenere, it must be derived from the French tenable, and therefore cannot have been compounded of in and tenible, as Dr. Johnson tells us, because there is no such word. It ought, therefore, to be written Intenable.

INTENSE, in-tênse, a. Raised to a high degree, strained, forced; vehement, ardent; kept on the stretch, anxiously attentive.

INTENSELY, in-tênse-lê, ad. To a great degree.

To INTER, in-ter', v. a. To cover under ground, to bury.

INTERCALAR, in-ter'ká-lár.

INTERCALARY, in-ter'ká-l'á-ré, } a.

Inserted out of the common order, to preserve the equation of time, as the twenty-ninth of February in a leap year is an intercalary day.

→ All our orthoëpists agree in placing the accent on the second syllable of intercalar and intercalate; and Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Ash, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, Barclay, and Entick, place it on the same syllable in intercalary; but Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, and Bailey, on the third. This latter pronunciation is certainly more agreeable to the ear; and as it is derived from the Latin intercalaris, a word of the same number of syllables with the penultimate long, it should seem we ought to place the accent on the same syllable in the English word, 508, but as our language absolutely forbids us to lay the stress on the a in this termination, 512, I see no reason why we should not place it on the preceding syllable, especially as the termination is not enclitical, 513, and therefore does not require the accent on the conjunctive part of the word, (see Academy). The accent on the third syllable, therefore, as it clashes with no analogy, and is so much more agreeable to the ear, ought, in my opinion, to be adopted.

To INTERCALATE, in-ter'ká-lá-te, v. a.

To insert an extraordinary day.

INTERCALATION, in-ter'ká-l'á-shun, s. Insertion of days out of the ordinary reckoning.

INTEREST, in-ter'ést, s. Concern, advantage, good; influence over others; share, part in any thing, participation; regard to private profit; money paid for use, usury; any surplus of advantage.

To INTERFERE, in-ter'féré', v. a. To interpose, to intermeddle; to clash, to oppose each other.

INTERFERENCE, in-ter'fé-l'rense, s. An interposing, an intermeddling.

→ There is a perfectly new pronunciation of this word, by placing the accent on the second syllable, which from its singularity, bids fair for a reception among the minor critics in pronunciation, especially when there are at first sight a few plausible analogies in its favour. Why, these critics will say, should we not pronounce this word with the accent on the antepenultimate syllable, as well as conference, deference, preference, inference, and circumference, which it is evident are not formed from our verbs to confer, defer, &c. but from the Latin conferens, deferens, &c.? It may be answered, that as there is no Latin verb interfero, there is not the same reason for accenting this word on the antepenultimate syllable, as there is for the other words; and therefore forming interference from our own verb to interfere, seems preferable to the forming of a mongrel Latin word, merely to avoid a formative of our own; especially when we have so many words in a similar termination deriving their accent from the verb; as defiance, from defy; reliance, from rely; assurance, from assure, &c. and even in this termination condolence, from condole; and why not interference from interfere? Entick's is the only Dictionary in which I have found this very common and useful word; but as Dr. Johnson has not got it, this omission in other Dictionaries is easily accounted for.

INTERFLUENT, in-ter'flú-ént, a. 518. Flowing between.

INTERFULGENT, in-ter'fúl'jént, a. Shining between.

INTERFUSED, in-ter'fúzd', a. 359. Poured or scattered between.

INTERLOCUTOR, in-têr-lôk-kû-tûr, s. 518.

Dialogist, one that talks with another.
 So great is the tendency of our language to the enclitical accent, that this word, though perfectly Latin, and having the penultimate u long, has not been able to preserve the accent on that syllable. Mr. Nares is the only orthoëpist who places the accent on u; Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, Mr. Barclay, and Entick, accent the antepenultimate syllable. I prefer Mr. Nares's accentuation.—See Prolocutor.

INTERSTICE, in-têr-stis, or in-têr-stis, s. Space between one thing and another.
↳ Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Narcs, Buchanan, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, and Mr. Barclay, place the accent on the second syllable of this word; and Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, Bailey, and Entick, on the first. I do not hesitate a moment to pronounce this the better accentuation: for as this word must be derived from the noun interstitium, and not from the verb intersto, the rule so often mentioned, of changing the secondary accent of the Latin word, when shortened into the principal accent of the English word, must take place here.—See Academy and Incomparable.

It is not easy to conjecture what could be the reason that this majority of orthoëpists should be found on the side of the penultimate pronunciation of this word. It certain that the greater part do but copy from former Dictionaries; but when an uncouth and uncommon pronunciation is adopted, it is generally for some learned reason from the dead languages, which the common inspector is utterly incapable of conceiving. In the present instance, however, there is not the shadow of a reason, from the original Latin, that we should place the accent on the second syllable of interstice, which would not oblige us to lay the stress on the same syllable of interfere, intervene, intercourse, interval, superflux, &c.

INTERSTITIAL, in-têr-stish'âl, a. Containing interstices.

INTERTEXTURE, in-têr-têks'tshûre, s. Diversification of things mingled or woven one among another.

INESTATE, in-tês-tâte, a. 91. Wanting a will dying without a will.

INTESTINAL, in-tês-tê-nâl, a. 88. Belonging to the guts.

↳ This word is sometimes pronounced with the accent on the third syllable with the i long, because the i in the Latin intestinum is long; but Dr. Johnson makes it more properly a formative of our own from intestine; and even if we were to allow this adjective to be derived immediately from the Latin substantive of the same number of syllables, we may see in Principles, No. 503, h, how many exceptions there are to this rule, and how probable it is that this word is one.

INTESTINE, in-tês-tîn, a. 140. Internal, inward; contained in the body; domestick, not foreign.

INTESTINES, in-tês-tînz, s. The guts, the bowels.

To INTROVERT, in-trô-vêrt', v. a. To turn inwards.

☞ This word is not in any Dictionary I have seen, but from its real utility ought to be in all of them. It is peculiarly expressive of that act of the mind which turns our thoughts upon ourselves; and is so happily exemplified by Hannah More, in her Strictures on Female Education, as at once to show the beauty of the thought and the propriety of the expression. Speaking of that exquisite sensibility which some females plead as a reason for shunning that distress, in the removing of which it should be exerted, she says, "That exquisite sense of feeling which God implanted in the heart as a stimulus to quicken us in relieving the miseries of others, is thus introverted, and learns to consider self as not the agent, but the object of compassion. Tenderness is made an excuse for being hard-hearted; and instead of drying the weeping eyes of others, this false delicacy reserves its own selfish tears, for the more elegant and less expensive sorrows of the melting novel, or the pathetic tragedy." Vol. II. p. 128.

To INTRUDE, in-trôôd', v. n. 176. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence, to enter without invitation or permission; to encroach, to force in un-called or unpermitted.

Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Ash, Mr. Narces, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, Entick, and Bailey, pronounce this word with the accent on the first syllable; and Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Barclay, on the second. Dr. Kenrick indeed tells us, that the accent is sometimes placed on the first; which is indeed very apparent from the number of writers I have produced for that accentuation. But the propriety of this pronunciation is not better supported by authority than by analogy. For if we had an English word from which a word of this kind might be formed, as declaratory, defamatory, &c. the accent will generally be found to be on the same syllable as in declare, defame, &c. but if we have no such corresponding English word, and the word of this termination comes from the Latin, as promontory, desultory, &c. the word then takes the secondary accent we give the Latin words promontorium, desultorius, &c. Now though our English verb to invent comes from the same parent invento as inventory, it is in so different a sense as to have no claim to the parentage. As therefore inventorium is the latter Latin word from which this word is derived, and as this has the secondary accent on the first syllable in our pronunciation of Latin, so inventory must have the principal accent on the same syllable in English.—See Academy, Incomparable, &c. Dr. Johnson, indeed, furnishes us with an authority from Shakespeare, against himself:

“ I found
 “ Forsooth an inventory thus importing
 “ The several parcels of his plate.”

INVENTRESS, in-vên-t-rês, s. A female that invents.

IRREFRAGABILITY, ir-rê-frâ-gâ-bil'ê-tê, s.

Strength of argument not to be refuted.

IRREFRAGABLE, ir-rê-frâ-gâ-bl, or ir-rê-frâg'â-bl, a. Not to be confuted, superior to argumental opposition.

♣ If we might judge by the uniformity we find in our Dictionaries, there would be no great difficulty in settling the accentuation of this word. Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Bailey, Eutick, W. Johnston, Perry, Barclay, and Buchanan, place the accent on the third syllable; Mr. Scott either on the second or third, with a preference to the latter; and Mr. Sheridan alone places it exclusively on the second. But notwithstanding Mr. Sheridan's accentuation stands single, if I am not much mistaken, it has not only the best usage on its side, but the clearest analogy to support it. It were, indeed, to be wished, for the sake of harmony, that, like the Greeks and Romans, we had no accent higher than the antepenultimate; but language is the vox populi. Our accent, in a thousand instances, transgresses these classic bounds, and who shall confine it? In compounds of our own, with the utmost propriety, we place the accent on the fourth syllable from the last, as in tearfulness, serviceableness, &c. 501; and a probable reason is given, under the word Academy, why we accent so many words from the Latin in the same manner; but be the reason what it will, certain it is, that this custom has prevailed. This prevalence of custom is sufficiently exemplified in the positive of the word in question; Refragable is accented by Johnson, Ash, and Bailey, on the first syllable, and would probably have been accented in the same manner by the rest, if they had inserted the word. Buchanan and Barclay, indeed, have the word, and accent it on the second; but their authority is greatly outweighed by the three others. Convinced, therefore, that pronouncing this word with the accent on the second syllable is following that path which the best usage has pointed out, I do not hesitate to dissent from so many authorities, especially when I find the best of these authorities inconsistent; for if we are to place the accent on the first syllable of Refragable, why we should remove the accent in Irrefragable I cannot conceive.—See Academy and Disputable.

IRREFRAGABLY, ir-rê-frâ-gâ-blê, ad. With force above confutation.

IRREFUTABLE, ir-rê-fû'tâ-bl, a. Not to be overthrown by argument.

♣ All our Dictionaries place the accent on the third syllable of this word, nor do I mean to affront such respectable authority, by placing it on the second, as in irrefragable, though there is the same reason for both. Let it not be pleaded that we have the verb refute in favour of the first pronunciation; this has not the least influence on the words indisputable, irrevocable, incomparable, &c. The reason why corruptible and refractory ought not to have the accent on the first syllable, arises from the difficulty of pronouncing the uncombining consonants pc and ct in syllables not under the stress.—See Principles, No. 517; also the words Acceptable and Refractory.

IRREGULAR, ir-rêg'gû-lâr, a. 28. Deviating from rule, custom, or nature; immethodical, not confined to any certain rule or order; not being according to the laws of virtue.

IRREGULARITY, ir-rêg'gû-lâr'ê-tê, s. Deviation from rule; neglect of method and order; inordinate practice.

IRREGULARLY, ir-rêg'gû-lâr-lê, ad. Without observation of rule or method.

To IRREGULATE, ir-rêg'gû-lâte, v. a. To make irregular, to disorder.

IRRELATIVE, ir-rê-lâ-tîv, a. Having no reference to any thing, single, unconnected.

IRRELEVANT, ir-rê-lê-vânt, a. Unassisting, unrelieving.

♣ This is one of the annual productions of the House of Commons (where new words and money bills naturally originate); but it certainly deserves reception, as it conveys a new idea, which is, that the object to which it relates is supposed to be in a fallen and abject state, and incapable of relief; whereas unassisting may relate to an object which indeed wants assistance, but which is still in a militant state, and not overcome. Every new shade of thought, however nice, enriches a language, and may be considered as a real acquisition to it: but this word, as it is generally used in Parliament, seems to signify nothing more than merely unrelated; and if this had been expressed by irrelative, though not strictly classical, yet a very allowable formation, it would have been of real use; but as it is used at present, it is a pedantick encumbrance to the language.—See Relevant.

IRRELIGION, ir-rê-lîd'jûn, s. Contempt of religion, impiety.

IRRELIGIOUS, ir-rê-lîd'jûs, a. 314. Contemning religion, impious; contrary to religion.

IRREMOVABLE, ir-rê-môûv'â-bl, a. Not to be moved, not to be changed.

IRRENOWNED, ir-rê-nôund', a. 369. Void of honour.

IRREPARABLE, ir-rêp'pâ-râ-bl, a. Not to be recovered, not to be repaired.

♣ This word and its simple Reparable come from the Latin Reparabilis and Irreparabilis, and are pronounced with the accent on the antepenultimate syllable, according to the analogy of words anglicised from the Latin, by dropping a syllable; which is, to place the accent on that syllable which had a secondary stress in our own English pronunciation of the Latin words.—See Academy and Incomparable.

IRREPARABLY, ir-rêp'pâ-râ-blê, ad. Without recovery, without amends.

IRREPLEVIABLE, ir-rê-plêv've-â-bl, a. Not to be redeemed. A law term.

IRREPREHENSIBLE, ir-rêp-prê-hên'sê-bl, a. Exempt from blame.

IRREPRESENTABLE, ir-rêp-prê-zent'â-bl, a. Not capable of representation.

IRREPROACHABLE, ir-rê-prôtsh'â-bl, a. 295. Free from blame or reproach.

IRREPROACHABLY, ir-rê-prôtsh'â-blê, ad. Without blame, without reproach.

IRREPROVEABLE, ir-rê-prôûv'â-bl, a. Not to be blamed, irreproachable.

IRREPETITIOUS, ir-rêp-tîsh'ûs, a. Encroaching, encroeping in.

♣ This word is in no Dictionary that I have met with; but it appears to me to deserve a place, as it is the only single word that expresses imperceptible intrusion. Mr. Elphinston seems to use it with precision, where he tells us, in his Principles of the English Language, "that etymology counts the b in crumb irrepititious, for, not having found it in foreign sources, she cannot see its use at home." Book I. page 25.

IRRESISTIBILITY, ir-rê-zîs-tê-bil'ê-tê, s. Power above opposition.

IRRESISTIBLE, ir-rê-zîs-tê-bl, a. Superior to opposition.

JUSTIFICATIVE, jûs-tîfl'ê-kâ-tîv, a. Justifying; serving to justify or prove.

→ I know not if I am excusable for inserting this word, which has not as yet found its way into any other Dictionary; but the frequency of seeing the French Pièces Justificatives seems to have familiarised it to our ears, and to invite us to the adoption of it. The distance of the accent from the end of the word can be no objection to an English speaker who has so many similar words, such as significative, purificative, &c. and as we have no single word that will exactly stand in its place, it seems to have a better right to admission than many other words which are found no where but in a Dictionary.—See Principles, No. 512.

JUSTIFICATOR, jûs-tê-fl-kâ-tîr, s. 521. One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

To JUTTY, jút'té, v. a. To shoot out beyond.

JUVENILE, jü've-níl, a. 145. Young, youthful. Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Perry, pronounce the i short in the last syllable of this word; and Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Buchanan, and W. Johnston, make it long. The former mode is, in my opinion, the more correct. If it should be urged that the i is long in the Latin Juvenilis, it may be answered, that the same letter is long in the Latin Hostilis, Servilis, and Subtilis, and yet the i in Hostile, Servile, and Subtile, is by Mr. Sheridan marked short.

KNOWLEDGE, nôl-lêdje, or nôl-lêdje, s. Certain perception; learning, illumination of the mind; skill in any thing; acquaintance with any fact or person; cognizance, notice; information, power of knowing.

☞ Scarcely any word has occasioned more alteration among verbal critics than this. A great appearance of propriety seems to favour the second pronunciation, till we observe a great number of similar words, where the long vowel in the simple is shortened in the compound, and then we perceive something like an idiom of pronunciation, which, to correct, would, in some measure, obstruct the current of the language. To preserve the simple without alteration in the compound, is certainly a desirable thing in language; but when the general tone of the language, as it may be called, crosses this analogy, we may depend on the rectitude of general custom, and ought to acquiesce in it. That the secondary accent shortens the vowel, which was long in the original, appears throughout the language in proclamation, provocation, &c. 530. That the primary accent does the same in preface, prelate, prelude, &c. is evident; and as ledge is no general termination of our own, which is applicable to several words, why should we not consider knowledge as a simple, and pronounce it independently on its original quantity? The patrons for the first pronunciation are, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, Mr. Barclay, Mr. Elphinston, and Mr. Scott; and for the second, W. Johnson and Mr. Buchanan. Mr. Perry gives both, but seems to allow the first the preference.—See Principles, No. 328. 515

LAMBKIN, lâm'kîn, s. A little lamb.

LAMBATIVE, lâm'bâ-tiv, a. 157. Taken by licking.

LAMBATIVE, lâm'bâ-tiv, s. A medicine taken by licking with the tongue.

LAMBS-WOOL, lâms'wûl, s. Ale mixed with the pulp of roasted apples.

Mr. Elphinstone has a no less strange than whimsical derivation of this word from an old French substantive le must, "That the verb must should ever have been Scottishly man, (as, ye man doo't, for ye must do it), seems indeed as surprising as that the old le moust (now moult) the noun must should ever have Englishly run into lamb's wool, which beats far the change of Asparagus into Sparrow-grass, or the elegant as elliptical grass." Such a derivation, perhaps, is not impossible; but I should think the more natural, as well as the more easy one, is the resemblance of the soft pulp of an apple to the wool of a lamb.—See Asparagus, and the noun Must.

LAMBENT, lâm'bent, a. Playing about, gliding over without harm.

LAMDOIDAL, lâm-dôid'âl, a. Having the form of the Greek letter Lamda or A.

LAME, lâme, a. Crippled, disabled in the limbs; hobbling, not smooth, alluding to the feet of a verse; imperfect, unsatisfactory.

LAMENTABLE, lâm'mên-tâ-bl, a. To be lamented, causing sorrow; mournful, expressing sorrow; miserable, in a ludicrous or low sense, pitiful.—See Incomparable.

LAMENTABLY, lâm'mên-tâ-blê, ad. With expressions or tokens of sorrow; so as to cause sorrow; pitifully, despicably.

LAMENTATION, lâm'mên-tâ'shûn, s. 527. 530. Expression of sorrow, audible grief.

LAMENTER, lâ'ment'ûr, s. 98. He who mourns or laments.

LAMENTINE, lâm'mên-tine, s. 149. A fish called a sea cow or manatee.

LAMINA, lâm'mê-nâ, s. Thin plate, one coat laid over another.

This word from its derivation from the Latin, and its similar form to Stamina, may by some be taken for a plural, as Stamina is often for a singular; but it must be observed, that Lamina is a noun singular of the first declension; and that if we speak learnedly, we ought to form the plural by laminae; but that if we descend to plain English, it ought to be Laminas.—See Animalcule and Stamina.

LAMINATED, lâm'mê-nâ-têd, a. Plated; used of such bodies whose contexture discovers such a disposition as that of plates lying over one another.

To LAMM, lâm, v. a. To beat soundly with a cudgel. A low word.

LANNER, lán'hûr, s. 98. A species of hawk.

LANSQUENET, lán'skên-nêt, s. A common foot soldier; a game at cards.

↗ This word, as a game at cards, is altered by the vulgar into Lambskinnet. This is something, at least, which they understand; and this very intelligibility confirms them in the corruption.—See Asparagus.

LANTERN, lán'tûrn, s. 98. 418. A transparent case for a candle; a lighthouse, a light hung out to guide ships.

↗ This word, says Dr. Johnson, by mistake is often written Lantern. The cause of this mistake is easy; transparent cases for candles were generally made of horn; and this was sufficient to persuade those who knew nothing of the derivation of the word from the Latin Lanterna, that this was its true etymology.—See Asparagus.

LANTERN-JAWS, lán'tûrn-jåwz, s. A thin visage.

LANGUINOUS, lán'nu'jîn-ús, a. 314. Downy, covered with soft hair.

LATRIA, lâ-tré-á, s. 92. The highest kind of worship, as distinguished from Dulia.

☞ This word, by being derived from the Greek λατρεία is pronounced by Johnson, and after him by Ash, with the accent on the penultimate syllable; both of them had forgot their Greek in the word Dulia, which they accent on the antepenultimate, though derived from δουλεία. One of these modes of accentuation must be wrong; and my opinion is, that, as these words are appellatives, we should adopt that accent which Dr. Johnson did when his Greek was out of his head; that is, the antepenultimate.—See Cyclopaedia.

LATROCINY, lâ-tró-sé-né, s. Larceny, theft, robbery; a literal version of the Latin latrocinium, which was afterwards contracted into larceny.

☞ It may be observed that Dr. Johnson spells this word with an e in the second syllable, while both its Latin and French derivation require, as Mason has shown from Blackstone, that it ought to be written larciny.

LEGATION, lég'gá-shûn, s. Deputation, commission, embassy,

LEGATOR, lég'gá-tór, s. 166. One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.
 This word seems to have the accent on the last syllable, the better to distinguish it from its correlative legatee.
LEGEND, lég'génd, s. A chronicle or register of the lives of saints; any memorial or relation; an incredible unauthentic narrative; any inscription, particularly on medals or coins.
 This word is sometimes pronounced with the vowel in the first syllable short, as if written léd-jend. This has the feeble plea of the Latin word Lego to produce; but with what propriety can we make this plea for a short vowel in English, when we pronounce that very vowel long in the Latin word we derive it from? The genuine and ancient analogy of our language, as Dr. Wallis observes, is, when a word of two syllables has the accent on the first, and the vowel is followed by a single consonant, to pronounce the vowel long. It is thus we pronounce all Latin words of this kind; and in this manner we should certainly have pronounced all our English words, if an affectation of following Latin quantity had not disturbed the natural progress of pronunciation.—See Drama. But, besides this analogy, the word in question has the authority of Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Bailey, Entick, Perry, and Buchanan, on its side. Dr. Kenrick and Dr. Ash are the only abettors of the short sound.
LEGENDARY, léd'jén-dá-ré, a. Pertaining to a legend.
 As the preceding word has, by the clearest analogy, the vowel in the first syllable long, so this word, by having the accent higher than the antepenultimate, has as clear an analogy for having the same vowel short, 530, 535. This analogy, however, is contradicted by Dr. Ash, W. Johnston, Mr. Scott, Entick, Buchanan, and Perry, who make the vowel e long, as in Legend. As Dr. Johnson's accentuation does not determine the quantity of the vowel, his not inserting this word is, in this case, no loss; but Mr. Sheridan's omission of it deprives us of a valuable opinion.
LEGER, léd'júr, s. 98. A leger-book, a book that lies in the counting house.
LEGERDEMAIN, léd'júr-dé-máne, s. Sleight of hand, juggle, power of deceiving the eye by nimble motion, trick.
LEGERITY, lè-jér'è-té, s. Lightness, nimbleness.
LEGGED, lég'd, a. 359. Having legs.
LEGIBLE, léd'jé-bl, a. 405. Such as may be read; apparent, discoverable.
LEGIBLY, léd'jé-blé, ad. In such a manner as may be read.
LEGION, léd'jûn, s. A body of Roman soldiers, consisting of about five thousand, a military force; any great number.
LEGIONARY, léd'jûn-ár-é, a. Relating to a legion; containing a legion, containing a great indefinite number.
To LEGISLATE, léd'jîs-láte, v. n. To enact laws.
 This word is neither in Johnson nor Sheridan. For the pronunciation of the first syllable, see the following words:
LEGISLATION, léd'jîs-lá-shûn, s. The act of giving laws.
LEGISLATIVE, léd'jîs-lá-tív, a. Giving laws, law-giving.
LEGISLATOR, léd'jîs-lá-túr, s. 166. 521. A law-giver, one who makes laws for any community.
LEGISLATURE, léd'jîs-lá-tshûre, s. 461. The power that makes laws.
 Some respectable speakers in the House of Commons pronounce the e in the first syllable of this word long, as if written Legislature, and think they are wonderfully correct in doing so, because the first syllable of all Latin words, compounded of Lex, is long. They do not know that, in pronouncing the word in this manner they are contradicting one of the clearest analogies of the language; which is, that the antepenultimate, and secondary accent, shorten every vowel they fall upon, except u, unless they are followed by a diphthong, 534, 535. This analogy is evident in a numerous catalogue of words ending in ity, where the antepenultimate vowel is short in English, though long in the Latin words whence they are derived, as serenity, divinity, gloriosity, &c. The same may be observed of the words declamatory, deliberative, &c. where the two second syllables are short in English, though long in the Latin declamatorius, deliberativus, &c. Even the words liberal and liberty, if pronounced with their first syllables long, as in the Latin words liberalis and libertas, ought to be sounded lye'beral and lye'berly. If, therefore, we consider the accent on the first syllable of legislator, legislature, or legislative, either as primary or secondary, we find a clear analogy for shortening the vowel; nor can we have the least reason for lengthening it, which will not oblige us in the same manner to lengthen the first vowel of lenitive, pedagogue, pacification, and a thousand others.—See Principles, No. 530. 535. Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Perry, mark the e in the first syllable of this word and its relatives short; W. Johnston only marks them long. From Entick we can gather the quantity of this vowel in no word but legislate, where he makes it long, and Ash, Bailey, and Buchanan, do not mark it either way. These authorities sufficiently show us the general current of custom; and the analogies of the language sufficiently show the propriety of it.

LEGITIMACY, lē-jit-tē-mā-sē, s. Lawfulness of birth; genuineness, not spuriousness.

LEGITIMATE, lē-jit-tē-māte, a. 91. Born in marriage, lawfully begotten.

To LEGITIMATE, lē-jit-tē-māte, v. a. 91.

To procure to any the right of legitimate birth; to make lawful.

LEGITIMATELY, lē-jit-tē-māte-lē, ad. Lawfully, genuinely.

LEGITIMATION, lē-jit-tē-mā-shūn, s. Lawful birth; the act of investing with the privileges of lawful birth.

LEGUME, lēg-gūme, } s. 503.

LEGUMEN, lē-gū-mēn, } s. 503.
Seeds not reaped, but gathered by the hand; as, beans, in general, all larger seeds; pulse.—See Bitumen and Blasphemous.

LEGUMINOUS, lē-gū-mē-nūs, a. Belonging to pulse, consisting of pulse.

LEISURABLE, lē-zhūr-ā-bl, a. Done at leisure, not hurried, enjoying leisure.

LEISURABLY, lē-zhūr-ā-blē, ad. At leisure, without tumult or hurry.

LEISURE, lē-zhūre, s. 251. Freedom from business or hurry; vacancy of mind; convenience of time.

Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Smith, pronounce the diphthong in this word long; and Mr. Nares, Mr. Elphinston, and Mr. Barclay, short. The first manner is, in my opinion, preferable.

LEISURELY, lē-zhūr-lē, a. Not hasty, deliberate.

LEISURELY, lē-zhūr-lē, ad. Not in a hurry, slowly.

LEMMA, lēm-mā, s. 92. A proposition previously assumed.

LEMON, lēm-mūn, s. 166. The fruit of the lemon-tree; the tree that bears lemons.

LEMONADE, lēm-mūn-āde, s. Liquor made of water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.

To LEND, lēnd, v. a. To deliver something to another on condition of repayment; to suffer to be used on condition that it be restored; to afford, to grant in general.

LENDER, lēnd-ūr, s. 98. One who lends any thing; one who makes a trade of putting money to interest.

LENGTH, lēngth, s. The extent of any thing material from end to end; horizontal extension; a certain portion of space or time; extent of duration; full extent, uncontracted state; end; at Length, at last, in conclusion.

To LENGTHEN, lēng'thn, v. a. 103. To draw out, to make longer; to protract, to continue; to protract pronunciation; to Lengthen but, to protract, to extend.

To LENGTHEN, lēng'thn, v. n. To grow longer, to increase in length.

LENGTHWISE, lēngth-wīze, ad. According to the length.

LENIENT, lē-nē-ēnt, a. 113. Assuasive, softening, mitigating; laxative, emollient.

LENIENT, lē-nē-ēnt, s. An emollient or assuasive application.

To LENIFY, lēn-nē-fl, v. a. 183. To assuage, to mitigate.

LENITIVE, lēn-tē-tiv, a. 157. Assuasive, emollient.

LENITIVE, lēn-tē-tiv, s. Any thing applied to ease pain; a palliative.

LENITY, lēn-tē-tē, s. Mildness, mercy, tenderness.

LENS, lēnz, s. 434. A glass spherically convex on both sides, is usually called a Lens; such is a burning-glass; or spectacle-glass, or an object-glass of a telescope.

LENT, lēnt, Part. pass. from Lend.

LENT, lēnt, s. The quadragesimal fast; a time of abstinence.

LENTEN, lēnt-tū, a. 103. Such as is used in Lent; sparing.

LENTICULAR, lēn-tik-kū-lār, a. Doubly convex, of the form of a lens.

LENTIFORM, lēn-tē-fōrm, a. Having the form of a lens.

LENTIGINOUS, lēn-tid-jin-ūs, a. Scurfy, furfuraceous.

LENTIGO, lēn-tigō, s. 112. A freckly or scurfy eruption upon the skin.—See Vertigo.

LENTIL, lēn-tīl, s. A kind of pulse.

LENTISK, lēn-tisk, s. A beautiful evergreen; the Mastich tree.

LENTITUDE, lēn-tē-tūde, s. Sluggishness, slowness.

LENTNER, lēn-tūr, s. 98. A kind of hawk.

LENTOR, lēn-tūr, s. 166. Tenacity, viscosity; slowness, delay. In physics, that size, viscid part of the blood which obstructs the vessels.

LENTOUS, lēn-tūs, a. Viscous, tenacious, capable to be drawn out.

LEONINE, lēō-nīne, a. 149. Belonging to a lion, having the nature of a lion. Leonine verses are those of which the end rhymes to the middle, so named from Leo the inventor.

LEOPARD, lēp-pūrd, s. 88. A spotted beast of prey.

LEPER, lēp-pūr, s. 98. One infected with a leprosy.

All our orthoëpists are unformed in pronouncing this word with the first syllable short, as in leprosy.

LEPEROUS, lēp-pūr-ūs, a. Causing leprosy. Properly Leprous.

LEPORINE, lēp-pō-rīne, a. Belonging to a hare, having the nature of a hare.

Mr. Sheridan has marked the e in the first syllable of this word long, without even the flimsy plea of Latin quantity to support it. Mr. Perry, Entick, and Dr. Ash, are the only other orthoëpists from whom we can gather the pronunciation of this letter. The two first are for the short sound, and the last for the long one. But the short sound is so agreeable to analogy, as to want no authorities to support it.—See Principles, No. 530. 535.

LEPROSY, lēp-prō-sē, s. A loathsome distemper, which covers the body with a kind of white scales.

LEPROUS, lēp-prūs, a. 314. Infected with a leprosy.

LESS, lēs, A negative or privative termination. Joined to a substantive, it implies the absence or privation of the thing; as, a witless man.

LESS, lēs, a. The comparative of Little; opposed to greater.

LESS, lēs, s. A smaller quantity, a smaller degree.

LESS, lēs, ad. In a smaller degree; in a lower degree.

LESSEE, lēs-sē, s. The person to whom a lease is given.

To LESSEN, lēs-sē, v. a. 103. To diminish in bulk; to diminish the degree of any quality; to degrade, to deprive of power or dignity.

To LESSEN, lēs-sē, v. n. To grow less, to shrink.

LESSER, lēs-sūr, a. 98. A barbarous corruption of Less.

LESSON, lēs-sē, s. 170. Any thing read or repeated to a teacher; precept; notion inculcated; portions of 559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fäst 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pine 105, pîn 107—nô 162, möve 164, scripture read in divine service; tune pricked for an instrument; a rating lecture.

LESSOR, lês³-sôr, s. 166. One who lets any thing to farm, or otherwise, by lease.

LEST, lêt, or lêst, conj. That not; for fear that.
 ↳ Almost all our orthoëpists pronounce this word both ways; but the former seems to be by much the more general. This word is derived from the adjective least; but it is not uncommon for words to change their form when they change their class. Dr. Wallis's advice to spell the superlative of little lessest, has not yet been followed, and probably never will; and therefore there is no necessity for Dr. Lowth's expedient to distinguish these words by spelling the conjunction least, like the adjective. But why we should sound the e long, contrary to the analogy of spelling, while such a pronunciation confounds the conjunction and the adjective, cannot be conceived. The second pronunciation, therefore, ought to be exploded.

To LET, lêt, v. a. To allow, to suffer, to permit; to put to hire; to grant to a tenant; to suffer any thing to take a course which requires no impulsive violence; to permit to take any state or course; to Let blood, is elliptical for To let out blood, to free it from confinement, to suffer it to stream out of the vein; to Let in, to admit; to Let off, to discharge; to Let out, to lease out, to give to hire or farm.

To LET, lêt, v. a. To hinder, to obstruct, to oppose. Not much used now.

LET, lêt, s. Hindrance, obstacle, obstruction, impediment.

LETHARGICK, lê-thâr²-jîk, a. 509. Sleepy by disease, beyond the natural power of sleep.

LETTERED, lêt²-tûrd, a. 359. Literate, educated to learning.

LETTUCE, lêt²-tis, s. A plant.—See Asparagus.

LEVANT, lê-vânt¹, s. 494. The east, particularly those coasts of the Mediterranean east of Italy.

↳ Milton has used this word as an adjective, with the accent on the first syllable; and Dr. Ash and Mr. Barclay explain it by Rising up, or becoming turbulent.

“Forth rish the Levant and the Poenent winds.”

In this case, also, the vowel e ought to have the long sound.—See Legend.

LEVATOR, lê-vât²-tûr, s. 166. 521. A chirurgical instrument, whereby depressed parts of the skull are lifted up.

LEUCOPHEGMACY, lû-kô-flêg²-mâ-sê, s. Pale-ness, with viscid juices and cold sweatings.

LEUCOPHEGMATICK, lû-kô-flêg²-mât²-îk, a. 509. Having such a constitution of body where the blood is of a pale colour, viscid, and cold.

LEVEE, lêv²-vê, s. The time of rising; the concourse of those who crowd round a man of power in a morning.

LEVEL, lêv²-vîl, a. 99. Even, not having one part higher than another; even with any thing else, in the same line with any thing.

LID, líd, s. A cover, any thing that shuts down over a vessel; the membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.
LIE, lí, s. 276. Any thing impregnated with some other body, as soap or salt.
 ↪ I have differed from Mr. Sheridan, and agree with every other orthoëpist in giving this word the same sound as lie, a falsehood.

LIE, lí, s. 276. A criminal falsehood; a charge of falsehood; a fiction.—See Appendix.

To LIE, lí, v. n. To utter criminal falsehood.

To LIE, lí, v. n. To rest horizontally, or with very great inclination against something else; to rest, to lean upon; to be reposit in the grave; to be in state of decumbiture; to be placed or situated; to press upon, to be in any particular state; to be in a state of concealment; to be in prison; to be in a bad state; to consist; to be in the power, to belong to; to be charged in any thing, as, an action Lieth against one; to cost, as, it Lies me in more money; to Lie at, to importune, to tease; to Lie by, to rest, to remain still; to Lie down, to rest, to go into a state of repose; to Lie in, to be in childbed; to Lie under, to be subject to; to Lie upon, to become an obligation or duty; to Lie with, to converse in bed.

LIEF, lééf, a. 275. Dear, beloved.

LIEF, lééf, ad. Willingly. Used now only in familiar speaking.

LIEGE, lééjé, a. 275. Bound by feudal tenure, subject; sovereign.

LIEGE, lééjé, s. Sovereign, superiour lord.

LIEUTENANCY, lév-tén-nán-sé, s. The office of a lieutenant; the body of lieutenants.

LIEUTENANT, lév-tén-nánt, s. 285. A deputy, one who acts by vicarious authority; in war, one who holds the next rank to a superiour of any denomination.

↪ This word is frequently pronounced by good speakers as if written Lieutenant. The difference between the short i and short e is so trifling as scarcely to deserve notice: but the regular sound, as if written Lieutenant, seems not so remote from the corruption as to make us lose all hope that it will in time be the actual pronunciation.

LIEUTENANTSHIP, lév-tén-nánt-shíp, s. The rank or office of lieutenant.

LIFE, lífe, s. Plural Lives. Union and co-operation of soul with body; present state; enjoyment or possession of terrestrial existence; blood, the supposed vehicle of life; conduct, manner of living with respect to virtue or vice; condition, manner of living with respect to happiness and misery; continuance of our present state; the living form, resemblance exactly copied; common occurrences, human affairs, the course of things; narrative of a life past; spirit, briskness, vivacity, resolution; animated existence, animal being; a word of endearment.

LIFEBLOOD, lífe-blúđ, s. The blood necessary to life.

LIFEGIVING, lífe-gív-ing, a. Having the power to give life.

↪ 559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fåt 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pline 105, pîn 107—nô 162, molve 164,

To Low, lō, or lō, v. n. To bellow as a cow.

↪ Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Buchanan, W. Johnston, and Mr. Barclay, pronounce this word in the last manner; but Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Perry, in the first: and that this is the true pronunciation there is little doubt; not only as it is the more general sound of the diphthong, 323, but as it is more expressive of the thing signified. The other sound is, in my opinion, a novelty, and ought to be exploded. Without laying much stress on Dryden's rhyme, it seems to confirm this opinion.

"Fair lō grac'd his shield; but lō now,
"With horns exalted stands, and seems to low."

LOWBELL, lō'bel, s. A kind of fowling in the night, in which the birds are awakened by a bell, and lured by a flame.

To LOWER, lō'ūr, v. n. 323. To appear dark, stormy, and gloomy, to be clouded; to frown, to pout, to look sullen.

↪ Whether this word comes from the Dutch loeren, to look askance, or from the English word lower, signifying to look low, as the sky seems to do when it is heavy and thick with clouds, (which is the much more probable derivation); it certainly cries aloud for a different spelling from lower, to make low. For the reasons, see the words Flower and Flour; Bovel and Form.

↗ I have given the first syllable of this and the succeeding words, compounded of male, the long sound of a, because I look upon male as a prefix not alterable in its sound in words of our own composition, any more than arch, fore, mis, pre, or vice: arch and fore are used separately as adjectives, which is not the case with male; but mis, pre, and vice, are never used out of composition, and are therefore exactly under the same predicament as male. Dis not being a prefix of our own which we can apply to words at pleasure, alters the sound of a according to the presence or absence of the accent, or the nature of the succeeding consonants, see Dis; but mis being applicable to any words, never alters the sound of a, 426. Pre, when prefixed to words of our own, as pre-conceived, pre-supposed, &c. never shortens the vowel, 530, 531, 532; and vice in vice-president, vice-admiral, &c. might as well be changed into vis-president, and vis-admiral, as male-content and male-practice into malcontent and malpractice. But though almost all our Pronouncing Dictionaries adopt the short sound of a, and some even leave out the c, yet as analogy is so decidedly in favour of the long sound, and custom is not unanimous, the long sound ought certainly to have the preference with all who aim at correctness and consistency. W. Johnston is the only one who adopts this pronunciation; and Barclay, by putting a hyphen after male, seems to favour it. If custom has decided in favour of the short sound of a, the e ought to be omitted in writing, and then the spelling and sound would not be at variance; but as this would lead to incurable evils in language, the pronunciation ought rather to conform to the orthography.—See Bavel.

It must be carefully observed, that formatives of our own, as male-content, male-practice, &c. are under a very different predicament from maltersation, a pure French word, and malevolent from the Latin malevolus.

MALL, mêl, s. A stroke, a blow. Obsolete. A kind of beater or hammer; a walk where they formerly played with malls and balls.

↗ This word is a whimsical instance of the caprice of custom. Nothing can be more uniform than the sound we give to a before double l in the same syllable; and yet this word, when it signifies a wooden hammer, has not only changed its deep sound of a in all into the a in alley, but has dwindled into the short sound of e in Mall, a walk in St. James's Park, where they formerly played with malls and balls, and from which it had its name; and to crown the absurdity, a street parallel to this walk is spelt Pall Mall, and pronounced Pellmell, which confounds its origin with the French adverb pêle mêle. For Bailey appears to derive the name of the street justly from pellere malles to strike with a mallet. That this word was justly pronounced formerly, we can scarcely doubt, from the rhymes to it:

"..... With mighty mall
"The monster merciless him made to fall." Spenser
"And give that reverend head a mall
"Or two or three against the wall." Hudibras.

As a corroboration of this, we find a large wooden club used for killing swine, called and spelt a mall, rhyming with all; and the verb signifying to beat or bruise is spelt and pronounced in the same manner. The word mallet, where the latter l is separated from the former, is under a different predicament, and is pronounced regularly.—See Principles, No. 85.

MAMMIFORM, máł-mé-fórm, a. Having the shape of paps or dugs.

MAMMILLARY, máł-mil-lá-ré, a. Belonging to the paps or dugs.
 ¶ I have departed from Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, Entick, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, and Dr. Johnson, in the accentuation of this word, and agree with Mr. Nares and Bailey in placing the stress upon the first syllable of this and similar words, and as Dr. Johnson himself has done on Axillary, Maxillary, Papillary, and Capillary; and as all our orthoëpists but Dr. Kenrick on Miscellany.—See Academy.

MAMMOCK, máł-múk, s. 166. A large shapeless piece.

To MAMMOCK, máł-múk, v. a. To tear, to pull to pieces.

MAMMON, máł-mún, s. 166. Riches.

MAN, máł, s. 81. Human being, the male of the human species; a servant, an attendant; a word of familiarity bordering on contempt; it is used in a loose signification like the French on, one, any one; one of uncommon qualifications; individual; a moveable piece at chess or draughts; Man of war, a ship of war.

To MAN, máł, v. a. To furnish with men; to guard with men; to fortify, to strengthen; to lame a hawk.

MANACLES, máł-ná-klz, s. 405. Chains for the hands.

MANCIET, máłsh'ít, s. 99. A small loaf of fine bread.

MANCHINEEL, máłsh-in-éél, s. A large tree, a native of the West Indies.
 ¶ I do not hesitate to place the accent on the last syllable of this word, as this stress, not only its form, but the best usage, seems to require. Dr. Johnson and other orthoëpists place the accent in the same manner, contrary to Mr. Sheridan, who places it on the first syllable.

To MANCIPATE, máł-sé-páte, v. a. To enslave, to bind.

MANCIPATION, máł-sé-pá-shúš, s. Slavery, involuntary obligation.

MANCIPLE, máł-sé-pl, s. 405. The steward of a community, the purveyor.

MANDAMUS, máł-dá-mús, s. A writ from the court of King's Bench.

MANDARIN, máł-dá-rén, s. 112. A Chinese nobleman or magistrate.
 ¶ Dr. Johnson, and the other lexicographers after him, spell this word without the final e. It may be observed, that most of the names from the East came to us by missionaries, and the first accounts we have of these countries are from the French, which accounts for the manner in which we always hear it pronounced.

MANDATARY, máł-dá-tár-é, s. 512. He to whom the Pope has, by virtue of his prerogative, and his own proper right, given a mandate for his benefice.

MANDATE, máł-dáte, s. 91. Command; precept, charge, commission, sent or transmitted.

MANKILLER, mân-nê-kîl-lûr, s. 98. Murderer.

MANKIND, mân-kyînd, s. 498. The race or species of human beings.—See Guard.

↪ This word is sometimes improperly pronounced with the accent on the first syllable, and is even marked so by Dr. Ash. Milton, with his usual license, sometimes places the accent in this manner:

“..... where he might likeliest find

“The only two of mankind, but in them

“The whole included race his purpos'd prey”

But Pope, in this particular, is a better guide, both in prose and verse:

“The proper study of mankind is man.” Essay on Man.

It may be asked, indeed, why mankind should not have the accent on the first syllable as well as womankind; it may be answered, that it has, when it is to distinguish it from womankind; but when it is used absolutely, it includes womankind; and to avoid the distinction which an accent on the first syllable would imply, it very properly throws the accent on the general, and not on the specific part of the word, 521.

MANLIKE, mân-nê-lîke, a. Having the qualities of a man, befitting a man.

MANLESS, mân-nê-lêst, a. Without men, not manned.

MANNISH, mân-nîsh, a. Having the appearance of a man, bold, masculine, impudent.

MANŒUVRE, mân-žê-vûr, s. An attempt, out of the common course of action, to relieve ourselves, or annoy our adversary; and generally used in maritime affairs.

↪ This word, though current in conversation and really useful, is in no Dictionary I have met with. The triphthong œu has no correspondent sound in our language, and I have given it what I thought the nearest to it; but as the word seems to be universally adopted, it ought to be anglicised, and may be safely pronounced as I have marked it, by those who cannot give it the exact French sound.

MANOR, mân-nûr, s. 418. Manor signifies in common law, a rule or government which a man hath over such as hold land within his fee.

MANORIAL, mân-nô-rê-âl, a. Belonging to a manor.

To MANTLE, mân-n-tl, v. n. To spread the wings as a hawk in pleasure; to be expanded, to spread luxuriantly; to gather any thing on the surface, to froth; to ferment, to be in sprightly agitation.

MANTOLOGY, mân-n-tô-lô-jê, s. 518. The gift of prophecy.

MANTUA, mân-n-tshû-â, s. 333. A lady's gown.

↪ Dr. Johnson says this word was probably corrupted from the French manteau: and Mr. Elphinston, in his zeal for an homophonous orthography, as it may be called, says, “Manteau, not Mantua, having given title to the silk, the maker of manteos, or mantoes, will have the honour of leading the fashions at the court of truth, when, under so glorious patronage, she announces herself a Mantoe-maker, or Mantow-maker. Paduasoy is a similiar falsification of Podesoy, the English offspring of the French Pou de soie. The Italian cities are much obliged to affectation for having so long complimented them at her own expense. Guided by etymology, she had no business with the sound; and a stranger to analogy was not likely to know, that a mantel, mantoe, or cloke, was probably the first silken task of the English Mantoe-maker.”

MANTUAMAKER, mân-n-tû-mâ-kûr, s. 333. One who makes gowns for women.

MARIETS, má-r-ré-éts, s. 81. A kind of violet.

MARIGOLD, má-r-ré-góld, s. 81. A yellow flower.

Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Buchanan, pronounced long and slender, as in the proper name Mary; and this is supposed to be the true sound, as it is imagined the flower was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; but Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, and W. Johnston, give the a the short sound, as in marry; and in this they appear not only more agreeable to general usage, but to that prevailing tendency of shortening the antepenultimate vowel, which runs through the language, 503. 535. Losing the simple in the compound can be no objection, when we reflect on the frequency of this coalition, 515. Nor is it unworthy of observation, that gold, in this word, preserves its true sound, and is not corrupted into good.

To MARINATE, má-r-ré-náte, v. a. To salt fish, and then preserve them in oil or vinegar. Not used.

MARINE, má-r-réén, a. 112. Belonging to the sea.

MATRON, má'trún, s. An elderly lady; an old woman.

MATRONAL, má'tró-nál, or má'tró-nál, a.

Suitable to a matron, constituting a matron.

↗ I have excluded Mr. Sheridan's pronunciation, which makes the two first syllables of this word exactly like matron, because the word is a primitive in our language, derived from the Latin matronalis, and therefore, according to English analogy, when reduced to three syllables, ought to have the accent on the antepenultimate, see Academy; and this accent has, in simples, always a shortening power, 503. 535: The second pronunciation, though not so strictly agreeable to analogy as the first, is still preferable to Mr. Sheridan's. Matronish and matronly ought to have the first vowel and the accent as in matron, because they are compounds of our own; but we do not subjoin al to words as we do ish and ly, and therefore words of that termination are under a different predicament. Something like this seems to have struck Mr. Sheridan and Dr. Johnson when they accented the word Patronal: for though this word is exactly of the same form, and si^mperfectly similar in the quantity of the Latin vowels, we and matronal marked with the accent upon the first syllable, and patronal on the second. From Dr. Johnson's accentuation we cannot collect the quantity of the vowel; his authority, therefore, in the word in question, is only for the accent on the first syllable. To him may be added, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, and Entick, who accent and sound the a as Mr. Sheridan has done. Dr. Ash alone seems to favour the pronunciation I have given.

MATRONLY, má'trún-lē, a. Elderly, ancient.

See Matronal.

MATROSS, má'trós, s. Matrosses are a sort of soldiers next in degree under the gunners, who assist about the guns in traversing, spunging, firing, and loading them.

MAUL, máwl, a. A heavy hammer. Obsolete.

MAUND, mánd, s. 214. A hand basket.

↗ Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Perry give the sound of a in all to this word. Dr. Kenrick gives both the a in hard and that in all, but prefers the first.—See Taunt.

To MAUNDER, mánd-dúr, v. n. 214. To grumble, to murmur.

↗ Mr. Sheridan, Buchanan, W. Johnston, and Mr. Perry, pronounce the diphthong in this word as in Maund; but Mr. Nares and Mr. Elphinston, whose opinion in this point is of the greatest weight, pronounce it as I have marked it.—See Taunt.

MAUNDY-THURSDAY, máwn-dé, or mánd-dé-ihúr-z-dá, s. 214. The Thursday before Good Friday.

MAXILLAR, mág-zíl-lár, 478. } a.

MAXILLARY, máks-il-lár-é, 477. } a.

Belonging to the jaw bone.

↗ There is a diversity in the pronunciation of this word, which makes it necessary to recur to principles to decide which is best. Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Barclay, accent it on the first syllable; and Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Bailey, and Entick, on the second; and notwithstanding this majority, I am of opinion that the first manner is right. For though Maxillary and the other similar words of this termination are of the same number of syllables with the Latin words from which they are derived, as Maxillaris, Capillaris, &c. 503, e; yet as our language has an aversion to the accent on the a in these terminations which have the accent in the Latin words, 512, it seems agreeable to our own analogy to place the stress on that syllable to which we give a secondary stress in the original word, and that is the first.—See Academy and Mammillary.

MEDIATOR, mē-dē-ā-tūr, s. 534. One that intervenes between two parties; an intercessor, an entreator for another; one of the characters of our Blessed Saviour.

MEDIATORIAL, mē-dē-ā-tō-rē-āl, } a.

MEDIATORY, mē-dē-ā-tūr-ē, }
Belonging to a mediator.

For the o, see Domestick.—For the accent, see No. 512.

MEDIATORSHIP, mē-dē-ā-tūr-shīp, s. The office of a mediator.

MEDIATRIX, mē-dē-ā-trīks, s. A female mediator.

MEDICAL, mē-dē-kāl, a. Physical, relating to the art of healing.

MEDICALLY, mē-dē-kāl-ē, ad. Physically, medicinally.

MEDICAMENT, mē-dē-kā-mēnt, s. Any thing used in healing, generally topical applications.

For All our orthoëpists, but Bailey, pronounce this word with the accent on the first syllable; but my judgement much fails me if the true pronunciation ought not to be with the accent on the second, as in Predicament. My reason is, that this is the syllable on which we place the secondary accent in pronouncing the Latin words medicamentum and predicamentum; and it has often been observed, that this is our guide for accenting English words formed from the Latin by dropping a syllable.—See Academy.

MEDICAMENTAL, mē-dē-kā-mēnt-āl, a. Relating to medicine, internal or topical.

MEDICAMENTALLY, mē-dē-kā-mēnt-āl-ē, ad. After the manner of medicine.

To MEDICATE, mē-dē-kāte, v. a. To tincture or impregnate with any thing medicinal.

MEDICATION, mē-dē-kā-shiūn, s. The act of tincturing or impregnating with medicinal ingredients; the use of physick.

MEDICINABLE, mē-dis-sīn-ā-bl, a. Having the power of physick.

MEDICINAL, { mē-dīs-sē-nāl, }
{ mē-dē-sī-nāl, } a.

Having the power of healing, having physical virtue; belonging to physick.

Dr. Johnson tells us, that this word is now commonly pronounced medicinal, with the accent on the second syllable, but more properly and more agreeably to the best authorities medicinal. If by the best authorities Dr. Johnson means the Poets, the question is decided; but I look upon Poets to be the worst authorities in this case, as by the very rules of their art, a license is given them to depart from the general pronunciation; and that they often avail themselves of this license, cannot be disputed. But if by more properly Dr. Johnson alludes to the long i in the Latin medicinus or medicinalis, nothing can be more inconclusive. If the word be perfectly Latin, as well as English, we generally place the accent on the same syllable as in the original, as acumen, decorum, &c. but frequently otherwise, as orator, senator, character, &c. But if this Latin accentuation were to be servilely followed in Latin words anglicised, we should overturn the whole fabric of our pronunciation. Thus, doctrinal, pastoral, &c. &c. must have the accent on the second syllable instead of the first, and nothing but confusion would ensue. The truth is, the strong tendency of our language is to an antepenultimate accent, 303; and it is with reluctance we ever place it lower, except in words of our own composition, or where the latter syllables have either an assemblage of consonants or a diphthong; yet even in this case we find the antepenultimate accent sometimes prevail, as ancestor, annesty, magistrate, &c. and counterpoise, porcelain, chamberlain, interregn, &c. So that by attempting to bring our pronunciation under the laws of the Latin language, we disturb and pervert it. Let Poets, therefore, who have, and, perhaps, in some cases, ought to have, a language different from prose, enjoy the privilege of their art, and while we are reading them let us conform to their rules; but let us not strive against the general current of prosaic pronunciation, which is always right, and which is equally negligent of the peculiarities of Poets, and the pedantry of ancient derivation. The antepenultimate accentuation of this word is supported by Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry, Mr. Smith, W. Johnston, Barclay, Bailey, Fenning, and Entick. Mr. Sheridan gives both, and, by placing this accentuation first, seems to prefer it to the other.—See Indecorous and Inimical.

MEDICINALLY, mē-dīs-sē-nāl-lē, ad. Physically.

MEDICINE, mē-dē-sīn, s. Any remedy administered by a physician.

All our orthoëpists tell us that this word is generally pronounced in two syllables, as if written medicne. That so gross a vulgarism should gain ground in our language, is an imputation on our national taste. Our poets, who, when tortured for a word, often torture a word to ease themselves, are generally guilty of one part only of the cruelty of Procrustes, and that is of shortening such words as are too long for their verse; and these mutilations too often slide into our prosaic pronunciation; but against this abuse every accurate speaker ought to be on his guard. Nay, Cowley, as Mr. Nares informs us, crushes medicinal into two syllables; and instances from Milton of this kind are innumerable.

Mr. Elphinston adopts the dissyllable pronunciation as more agreeable to its immediate origin, the French médecine: but as we preserve the i in this word, the Latin medicina seems its more authentick original, and demands the sound of the i in medicne as much as in ominous, mutinous, and original, which Shakespeare and Milton sink in the same manner as the word in question.

To MEDICINE, mē-dē-sīn, v. a. To operate upon; or, to affect as physick. Not used.

MEDIETY, mē-dē-tē, s. Middle state, participation of two extremes, half.

MEDIUM, mē-dē-ūm, or mē-jē-ūm, s. 293.

Anything intervening; any thing used in ratiocination in order to a conclusion; the middle place or degree, the just temperature between extremes.

MEDLAR, mē-dlūr, s. 88. A tree, the fruit of that tree.

MEDLEY, mē-dlē, s. A mixture, a miscellany, a mingled mass.

MEDLEY, mē-dlē, a. Mingled, confused.

MEDULLAR, mē-dū-lār, } a.

MEDULLARY, mē-dū-lār-ē, }
Pertaining to the marrow.

I differ from all our orthoëpists in the accentuation of this word; for though they are uniform here, they differ so much from each other in similar words, as to show they are not very sure of their principles. My reasons for accenting the first syllable of this word are the same as for the same accentuation of Muxillary and Papillary, which see.

MEED, mēd, s. 246. Reward, recompense, present, gift.

MEEK, mēk, a. 246. Mild of temper, soft, gentle.

An account of transactions familiarly written; account of any thing.

☞ This word was universally, till of late, pronounced with the accent on the second syllable, as Dr. Johnson, W. Johnston, Dr. Kenrick, Barclay, Bailey, Buchanan, Fenning, and Pery have marked it. Some speakers have endeavoured to pronounce it with the accent on the first, as we find it marked in Mr. Nares, Dr. Ash, Scott, and Entick: but this is an innovation unsuitable to the genius of our pronunciation; which, in dissyllables having a diphthong in the last, inclines us to place the accent on that syllable, as much as in devoir, which we find accented on the last by all our orthoëpists without exception.

MEMORABLE, mēm-mūr-ā-bl, a. Worthy of memory, not to be forgotten.

MEMORABLY, mēm-mūr-ā-blē, ad. In a manner worthy of memory.

To MERCHANDISE, mên²-tshân-dlze, v. n. To trade, to traffick, to exercise commerce.

MERCHANT, mên²-tshânt, s. 352. One who trafficks to remote countries.

Mr. Sheridan pronounces the e in the first syllable of this word, like the a in march; and it is certain that, about thirty years ago, this was the general pronunciation; but since that time the sound of e has been gradually wearing away; and the sound of e is so fully established, that the former is now become gross and vulgar, and is only to be heard among the lower orders of the people. It is highly probable that, however coarse this sound of e may now seem, it was once not only the common pronunciation, but the most agreeable to analogy. We still find, that the vowel i before r, followed by another consonant, sinks into a broader sound by taking the short sound of e, which is really the short sound of a slender a, as virgin, virtue, &c.; and it is a similar alteration which takes place in the e before r, followed by another consonant, in clerk, serjeant, Derby, &c. where this vowel falls into the broader sound of the Italian a. Sermon, service, vermin, &c. are still pronounced by the vulgar, as if written sermon, service, verment, &c.; and this was probably the ancient manner of pronouncing every e in the same situation. This analogy is now totally exploded; and, except clerk, serjeant, and a few proper names, we have scarcely another word in the language where the e has not its true sound. But instead of saying with Mr. Nares, that merchant has returned to the proper sound of e, we may with greater probability assert, that this and every other word of the same form have acquired a sound of e, which they never had before, and which, though a feebler and a shorter sound, conduces to the simplicity and regularity of our pronunciation. Dr. Kenrick concurs, in my opinion, that pronouncing the e in this word like a is vulgar; and every other orthoëpist, who gives the sound of the vowels, marks it as I have done.

MERCHANTLIKE, mên²-tshânt-lîke, } a.

Like a merchant.

MERCHANT-MAN, mên²-tshânt-mân, s. 88.

METAGRAMMATISM, mĕt-â-grâm-â-tĭzm, s.

An anagrammatic transposition of letters, so as to form another word; as out of the letters of Addison, may be formed Siddona.

METAL, mĕt'tl, s. A hard compact body, malleable and capable of fusion. The metals are six in number; first, gold; second, silver; third, copper; fourth, tin; fifth, iron; and sixth, lead. Some have added mercury, or quicksilver, to the number of metals; but as it wants malleability, the criterion of metals, it is more properly ranked among the semi-metals. Courage, spirit.

↳ As the metaphorical sense of this word, courage and spirit, has passed into a different orthography, mettle, so the orthography of this sense has corrupted the pronunciation of the original word, and made it perfectly similar to the metaphorical one. It is almost the only instance in the language where al is pronounced in this manner, and the impropriety is so striking as to encourage an accurate speaker to restore the a to its sound, as heard in medal.—See Spittal.

METALEPSIS, mĕt-tâ-lĕp'sĭs, s. A continuation of a trope in one word through a succession of significations.

METALLICAL, mĕ-tâl-lĕ-kâl, } u.

METALLICK, mĕ-tâl-lĭk, 509. }
Partaking of metal, containing metal, consisting of metal.

METALLIFEROUS, mĕt-tâl-lĭf-ĕr-ŭs, a.

METALLINE, mĕt'tâl-lĭne, a. Impregnated with metal; consisting of metal.

↳ Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, and Bailey, accent the second syllable of this word; but Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Scott, Buchanan, Barclay, Fenning and Entick, the first. I do not hesitate to pronounce the latter mode the more correct; first, as it is a simple in our language, and, having three syllables, requires the accent on the antepenultimate, notwithstanding the double l, see Medicinal. In the next place, though there is no metallinus in Latin, it ought to follow the analogy of words of that termination derived from the Latin, as Crystallinus, Serpentinus, &c. which, when anglicised, lose the last syllable, and remove the accent to the first, see Academy.—For the i in the last syllable, see Principles, No. 148, 149.

METALLIST, mĕt'tâl-lĭst, s. A worker of metals, one skilled in metals.

METALLOGRAPHY, mĕt-tâl-lôg-grâ-fĕ, s. 518.

An account of metals.

METALLURGIST, mĕt'tâl-lŭr-jĭst, s. A worker of metals.

METALLURGY, mĕt'tâl-lŭr-jĕ, s. The art of working metals, or separating them from their ore.

↳ This word is accented three different ways by different orthoëpists. Dr. Johnson, Barclay, Fenning, and Perry, accent it on the second syllable; Sheridan, Buchanan, and Bailey, on the third; and Ash, Scott, Nares, and Entick, on the first; and Kenrick on the first and third. The accent on the first seems to me the most correct. Bailey derives this word from the Greek μεταλλουργία; and words of this form, upon dropping a syllable when anglicised, remove the accent higher, as philosophy, philology, &c. from φιλοσοφία, φιλολογία. The accent thus removed, in enclitic terminations, 513, generally falls upon the antepenultimate syllable, unless in the two succeeding syllables there are uncombinable consonants, as chiromancy, oligarchy; and in this case, for the ease of pronunciation, the accent generally rises to the next syllable, which throws a secondary or alternate accent on the penultimate, and by this means gives the organs a greater force to pronounce the uncombinable consonants than if they immediately followed the principal stress. See Principles, No. 517, 519.

To METAMORPHOSE, mĕt-tâ-môr-l'fŭs, v. a.

To change the form of any thing.

METAMORPHOSIS, mĕt-tâ-môr-l'fô-sĭs, s. 520.

Transformation, change of shape.

METAPHOR, mĕt'tâ-fŭr, s. 166. The application of a word to a use to which, in its original import, it cannot be put; a metaphor is a simile comprised in a word.

↔ 559. Fâte 73, fâr 77, fáll 83, fât 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pine 105, pîn 107—nô 162, môve 164,

METAPHORICAL, mêt-tâ-fôr-ê-kâl, }
 METAPHORICK, mêt-tâ-fôr-ik, 524. } a.

Not literal, not according to the primitive meaning of the word, figurative.

METAPHRASE, mêt-tâ-frâze, s. A mere verbal translation from one language into another.

METAPHRAST, mêt-tâ-frâst, s. A literal translator, one who translates word for word from one language into another.

METAPHYSICAL, mêt-tâ-fiz-ê-kâl, }
 METAPHYSICK, mêt-tâ-fiz-ik, 524. } a.

Versed in metaphysics, relating to metaphysics; in Shakespeare it means supernatural or preternatural.

METAPHYSICKS, mêt-tâ-fiz-îks, s. Ontology, the doctrine of the general affections of beings.

METASTASIS, mêt-tâs-tâ-sîs, s. 520. Translation or removal.

METATARSUS, mêt-â-târ-sûs, s. The middle of the foot, which is composed of five small bones connected to those of the first part of the foot.

METATHESIS, mêt-tâ-thê-sîs, s. 520. A transposition.

To METE, mête, v. a. To measure, to reduce to measure.

METEMPSYCHOSIS, mêt-têmp-sê-kô-sîs, s. 520. The transmigrating of souls from body to body.

METEOR, mêt-tê-ûr, or mêt-tshê-ûr, s. 263. Any bodies in the air or sky that are of a flux or transitory nature.

METEOROLOGICAL, mêt-tê-ô-rô-lô-d-jê-kâl, a. 518. Relating to the doctrine of meteors.

METEOROLOGIST, mêt-tê-ô-rô-lô-jîst, s. A man skilled in meteors, or studious of them.

METEOROLOGY, mêt-tê-ô-rô-lô-jê, s. The doctrine of meteors.

METEOROSCOPE, mêt-tê-ô-rô-s-kôpe, s. An instrument for taking the magnitude and distances of heavenly bodies.

↔ This word, though formed from the Greek, has, like telescope, anglicised its termination, and therefore ought not to have its final e sounded in a distinct syllable, as Mason's example from Albumazar has pronounced it.

METEOROUS, mêt-tê-ô-rûs, a. Having the nature of a meteor.

METER, mêt-tûr, s. 98. A measurer.

METHEGLIN, mêt-thê-g-lîn, s. Drink made of honey boiled with water and fermented.

METHINKS, mêt-thînkz! (Verb impersonal). I think, it seems to me.

METHOD, mêt-hô-d, s. 166. The placing of several things, or performing several operations in the most convenient order.

METHODICAL, mêt-thô-d-ê-kâl, a. Ranged or proceeding in due or just order.

METHODICALLY, mêt-thô-d-ê-kâl-ê, ad. According to method and order.

To METHODISE, mêt-hô-d-îze, v. a. To regulate, to dispose in order.

METHODIST, mêt-hô-d-îst, s. This word anciently signified a physician who practised by theory. One of a new kind of Puritans lately arisen, so called from their profession to live by rules, and in constant method.

METHOUGHT, mêt-thâwt! The pret. of Methinks.

METONYMICAL, mêt-tô-nîm-ê-kâl, a. Put by metonymy for something else.

METONYMICALLY, mêt-tô-nîm-ê-kâl-ê, ad. By metonymy, not literally.

METONYMY, mêt-tôn-ê-mê, or mêt-tô-nîm-ê, s. A rhetorical figure, by which one word is put for another, as the matter for the matricate; He died by steel, that is, by a sword.

↔ Authorities for the two different ways of accenting this word are so nearly balanced, that it is hard to say which preponderates. Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, Mr. Perry, Buchanan and Bailey, are for the first; and Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, W. Johnston, Mr. Scott, Mr. Barclay, Entick, and Gibbons, the author of the Rhetoric, for the last. In this case the ear and analogy ought to decide. I have no doubt that the accent on the first syllable was the ancient mode of pronouncing this word, as we find it so accented in almost all the systems of Rhetoric published several years ago for the use of schools; and as these words from the Greek were generally pronounced in the Latin manner; that is, the accent on the antepenultimate in Metonymia, and not on the penultimate, as in Metonymia, the secondary accent naturally fell on the first syllable, which is naturally become the principal of the English Metonymy, 503, see Academy. But that the ear is pleased with the antepenultimate accent cannot be doubted; and that this word has as great a right to that accent as lipothymy, homonymy, synonymy, &c. is unquestionable. Besides, the enclitical accent, as this may be called, is so agreeable to the ear, that, without evident reasons to the contrary, it ought always to be preferred.—See Principles, No. 513. 518, 519.

METOPSCOPY, mêt-tô-pô-s-kô-pê, s. 518.

The study of physiognomy.

METRE, mêt-têr, s. 416. Speech confined to a certain number and harmonic disposition of syllables.

METRICAL, mêt-trê-kâl, a. Pertaining to metre or numbers.

METROPOLIS, mêt-trô-pô-lîs, s. 518. The mother city, the chief city of any country or district.

METROPOLITAN, mêt-trô-pô-lî-tân, s. A bishop of the mother church, an archbishop.

METROPOLITAN, mêt-trô-pô-lî-tân, a. Belonging to a metropolis.

METTLE, mêt-tl, s. 405. Spirit, sprightliness, courage.—See Metal.

METTLED, mêt-tld, a. 359. Sprightly, courageous.

METTLESOME, mêt-tl-sûm, a. Sprightly, lively, brisk.

METTLESOMELY, mêt-tl-sûm-lê, ad.

With sprightliness.

MEW, mù, s. A cage, an enclosure, a place where a thing is confined; cry of a cat; a sea fowl.

To MEWL, mùle, v. n. To squall as a child.

MEZEREON, mêt-zê-rê-ûn, s. 166. A species of spurge laurel.

MEZZOTINTO, mêt-sô-tîn-tô, s. A kind of graving.

MIASM, mî-âzm, s. Miasma, Greek. A particle or atom, supposed to arise from distempered, putrefying, or poisonous bodies.

↔ The plural of this word, in plain English, is miasms; if we choose to be learned, and use the Greek singular miasma, we must make the plural miasmata.—See Stamina.

MICE, mîse, s. The plural of Mouse.

MICHAELMAS, mîk-kêl-mûs, s. 201. 88. The feast of the archangel Michael, celebrated on the twentieth of September.

To MICHE, mîsh, v. n. To be secret or covered.

MICHER, mîsh-ûr, s. A lazy loiterer, who skulks about in corners and by-places, a hedge-creeper.

↔ This word, and the verb from which it is derived, are in Ireland pronounced with thg short i, as Mr. Sheridan has marked it; but I am much mistaken if it is not in England pronounced with the long i, as more agreeable to the orthography. There is a character in the face of the Stage Coach, written by Farquhar, called Micher, and this I recollect to have heard with the i pronounced long.

MICKLE, mîk-kî, a. 405. Much, great. Obsolete.

MICROCOSM, mî-k-rô-kôzm, s. The little world. Man is so called.

MICROGRAPHY, mî-k-rô-gf-î-â-fô, s. 129.

The description of the parts of such very small objects as are discernible only with a microscope.

↔ Why Mr. Sheridan should cross the general line of pronunciation, by accenting this word on the first syllable, cannot be conceived, especially as he has accented Micrometer properly.—See Principles, No. 518.

MICROSCOPE, mî-k-rô-skôpe, s. An optick instrument for viewing small objects.

nör 167, nót 163—túbe 171, túb 172; búll 173—áil 299—póund 313—thin 466, THIS 469.

MICROMETER, ml-kró^mme-túr, s. 129. 518.

An instrument contrived to measure small spaces.

MICROSCOPICAL, ml-kró-skóp^lé-kál, } a.

MICROSCOPIC, ml-kró-skóp^lpík, 509. } a.

Made by a microscope; assisted by a microscope; resembling a microscope.

MID, mid, a. Middle, equally between two extremes; it is much used in composition.

MID-COURSE, mid^lke^rse, s. Middle of the way.

MILLDAM, míll^ldám, s. The mound by which the water is kept up to raise it for the mill.

MILL-HORSE, míll^lhó^rse, s. Horse that turns a mill.

MILL-TEETH, míll^ltéeth, s. The grinders.

☞ 559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fât 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pine 105, pîn 107—nô 162, môve 164

MILLENARIAN, mîl-lê-nâ-rê-ân, s. One who expects the millennium.

MILLENARY, mîl-lê-nâ-rê, a. Consisting of a thousand.

MILLENNIUM, mîl-lên-nê-ûm, s. 113. A thousand years; generally taken for the thousand years, during which, according to an ancient tradition in the church, grounded on a doubtful text in the Apocalypse, our Blessed Saviour shall reign with the faithful upon earth after the resurrection.

MILLENNIAL, mîl-lên-nê-âl, a. 113. Pertaining to the millennium.

MILLEPEDES, mîl-lê-pêdz, or mîl-lêp-lê-dêz, s. Wood-lice, so called from their numerous feet.

☞ The former pronunciation of this word is adopted by Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Entick; and the latter by Mr. Nares, W. Johnston, Buchanan, and Perry. That the latter is the more fashionable cannot be denied; but that the former is the more correct is evident, from similar words which have been anglicised; thus Bipeds and Quadrupeds have dropped their Latin final syllable; and why the word in question should retain it, cannot be conceived. Besides, though seldom used in the singular, there is no reason that it should not be so used; and then it must necessarily become a Milliped: Centipede, properly Centiped, is adopted; and by forming Centipeds in the plural, shows us how we ought to form and pronounce the word in question; and if Antipede has not yet submitted to this analogy, it is because, like Cantharides, Caryatides, Manes, &c. it is never used in the singular.—See Antipodes.

MILLER, mîl-lûr, s. 98. One who attends a mill.

MILLER'S-THUMB, mîl-lûrz-thûm, s. A small fish found in brooks, called likewise a bull-head.

MILLESIMAL, mîl-lês-sê-mâl, a. Thousandth.

MILLET, mîl-lît, s. 99. A plant; a kind of fish.

MILLINER, mîl-lîn-nûr, s. 98. One who sells ribbands and dresses for women.

MILLION, mîl-yûn, s. 113. The number of a hundred myriads, or ten hundred thousand; a proverbial name for any very great number.

MILLIONTH, mîl-yûnth, a. The ten hundred thousandth.

MILLSTONE, mîl-stône, s. The stone by which corn is ground.

MILT, mîlt, s. The sperm of the male fish; the spleen.

MILTER, mîl-tûr, s. 98. The male of any fish, the female being called spawner.

MILTWORT, mîl-wûrt, s. An herb.

MIME, mîme, s. A buffoon who practises gesticulations, either representative of some action, or merely contrived to raise mirth.

To MIME, mîme, v. n. To play the mime.

MIMIC, mîl-mûr, s. 98. A mimick, a buffoon.

MIMETIC, mê-mêt-lîk, a. 129. Apt to imitate; having a tendency to imitation.

☞ This word is in no Dictionary that I have met with; but as it is regularly derived from the Greek μιμητικός, and is adopted by good speakers, there is no reason that it should not be inserted, especially as it seems to convey a different idea from similar words; for the adjective mimick seems to imply the act of imitating; and imitative, the power, capability, or habit of imitating; while mimetic signifies a proneness or tendency to imitation. Besides, mimetic seems to imply a ludicrous imitation of the actions and passions of living creatures, but imitative is applied to any objects, and generally implies serious and respectable imitation. Thus we say, "Painting is an imitative art, and that apes are very mimetic," and "it is observable, that those who are very mimetic are seldom imitative of grand and noble objects." Harris, therefore, seems to have used this word rather inaccurately, when he says, "The mimetic art of poetry has been hitherto considered as fetching its imitation from mere natural resemblance. In this it has been shown much inferior to painting, and nearly equal to musick."—Harris's Three Treatises, ch. iv.

MIMICAL, mîm-mê-kâl, a. Imitative, besitting a mimick, acting the mimick.

MIMICALLY, mîm-mê-kâl-lê, ad. In imitation, in a mimical manner.

MIMICK, mîm-mîk, s. 543. A ludicrous imitator, a buffoon who copies another's act or manner; a mean or servile imitator.

MIMICK, mîm-mîk, a. Imitative.

To MIMICK, mîm-mîk, v. a. To imitate as a buffoon, to ridicule by a burlesque imitation.

MIMICKRY, mîm-mîk-rê, s. Burlesque imitation.

MIMOGRAPHER, mê-môg-grâ-fûr, s. 129. A writer of farces.

MINACIOUS, mê-nâ-shûs, a. 356. 129. Full of threats.

MINACITY, mê-nâs-sê-tê, s. Disposition to use threats.

MINATORY, mîn-nâ-tûr-lê, a. 512. Threatening.

☞ For the o, see Domestic.

To MINCE, mînse, v. a. To cut into very small parts; to mention any thing scrupulously by a little at a time, to palliate.

To MINCE, mînse, v. n. To walk nicely by short steps; to speak small and imperfectly; to speak affectedly.

MINCINGLY, mîn-sîng-lê, ad. 410. In small parts, not fully; affectedly.

MIND, mînd, s. Intelligently power; liking, choice, inclination; thoughts, sentiments; opinion; memory, remembrance.

To MIND, mînd, v. a. To mark, to attend; to put in mind, to remind.

To MIND, mînd, v. n. To incline, to be disposed. Little used.

MINDÉD, mînd-êd, a. Disposed, inclined, affected towards.

MINDFUL, mînd-fûl, a. Attentive, having memory.

MINDFULLY, mînd-fûl-lê, ad. Attentively.

MINDFULNESS, mînd-fûl-nês, s. Attention, regard.

MINDLESS, mînd-lês, a. Inattentive, regardless; not endued with a mind, having no intellectual powers.

MIND-STRICKEN, mînd-strîk-ku, a. 103. Moved, affected in the mind.

MINE, mîne, pron. possessive. Belonging to me.

☞ In reading the Scripture, as, "Mine eyes have seen thy salvation," we are at no loss for the pronunciation of this word, as the dignity and solemnity of the composition invariably directs us to give it its long sound, as in fine, line, &c. but in Milton and other authors, where there is no such dignity or solemnity, this sound of the word has an intolerable stiffness, and ought not to have been used. Thus, in the Spectator, No. 195, Mr. Addison says, "Were I to prescribe a rule for drinking, it should be formed upon a saying quoted by Sir William Temple, 'The first glass for myself, the second for my friends, the third for good humour, and the fourth for mine enemies.' In Milton too:

"..... Methought
"Close at mine ear ore called me forth to walk" Par Lost
In Shakespeare, also:

"..... Sleeping within mine orchard
"My custom always in the afternoon,
"Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,
"With juice of cursed hebenon in a phial,
"Aod in the porches of mine ears did pour
"The leperous distilment." Hamlet

In all these instances we find a formality, a staleness, and uncouthness of sound, that is peculiarly unpleasant to the ear; and as this mode of writing was introduced when our language may be said to have been in its infancy, for the sake of euphony, (for it is clearly ungrammatical) so now, when it may be said that it has arrived at its maturity, the very same reason seems to entitle the present age to alter it; that is, I mean the pronunciation of it, by substituting my, pronounced like me, in its stead.

The disagreeable sound which mine has in these cases, has induced several readers to pronounce it min; but by thus mincing the matter, (if the pun will be pardoned me) they mutilate the word, and leave it more disagreeable to the ear than it was before. Readers, therefore, have no choice, but either to pronounce it as it is written, and to let the author be answerable for the ill sound; or, in all language but that of Scripture, to change it into my, pronounced like me.

Shakespeare seems to have used this word ludicrously in the Merry Wives of Windsor, where Falstaff says, “Mine host of the Garter—truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers” and the host, by requesting Falstaff to speak scholarly and wisely, seems to intimate, that this use of the word mine before a vowel or an h, was the most correct way of speaking. But though thy will, in familiar or ludicrous language, admit of being changed into the sound of the—mine will, on no occasion, suffer an alteration into min. When the vowel is used familiarly, it is always a burlesque upon the grave use of it, and therefore requires the grave sound, that the humour may not be lost.

MINE, mlne, s. 64. A place or cavern in the earth which contains metals, or minerals; a cavern dug under any fertilization.

To MINE, mlne, v. n. To dig mines or burrows.

To MINE, mlne, v. a. To sap, to ruin by mines, to destroy by slow degrees.

MINTAGE, mínt'ídje, s. 90. That which is coined or stamped; the duty paid for coining.

MINTER, mínt'úr, s. 98. A coiner.

MINTMAN, mínt'mán, s. 88. One skilled in coining.

MINTMASTER, mínt'má-stúr, s. One who presides in coining.

MINUET, mln'nú-ít, s. 99. A stately regular dance.

MINUM, mln'núm, s. With printers, a small sort of printing letter; with musicians, a note of slow time.

MINUTE, mln'núte', a. Small, little, slender, small in bulk.

☞ If we wish to be very minute, we pronounce the t in the first syllable long, as in the word directly, which see.

MINUTE, mln'nít, s. The sixtieth part of an hour; any small space of time; the first draught of any agreement in writing.

☞ I have given the colloquial pronunciation of this word, but in all solemn speaking would recommend the orthographical, or that which is indicated by the spelling.

To MINUTE, mln'nít, v. a. To set down in short hints.

MINUTE-BOOK, mln'nít-bóok, s. Book of short hints.

MINUTE-GLASS, mln'nít-glás, s. Glass of which the sand measures a minute.

MINUTELY, mln'núte'lé, ad. To a small point, exactly.—See Minute.

MINUTENESS, mln'núte'nés, s. Smallness, exility, inconsiderableness.

MINUTE-WATCH, mln'nít-wótsh, s. A watch in which minutes are more distinctly marked than in common watches which reckon by the hour.

MINUTIA, mln'nú-shé-á, 92. The smallest part of any thing.

☞ This word, which is much in use, is a perfect Latin word, the plural of which, minutiae, is pronounced

MINUTIE, mln'nú-shé-é.

MINX, míngks, s. 408. A she puppy; a young, pert, wanton girl.

MIRACLE, mir'á-kl, s. A wonder, something above human power; in theology, an effect above human or natural power, performed in attestation of some truth.

☞ I have differed from Mr. Sheridan in the sound of the first syllable of this word, as he seems to have adopted a vulgar pronunciation, which does not distinguish between the sound of i, succeeded by single or double r, not final; and the sound of i final, or succeeded by r and another consonant. In the former case the i is pure, and has exactly the same sound as its representative y in Pyramid, Lyrick, &c.; in the latter the i goes into short e or u, as in Birth, Virtue, &c. or Sir, Stir, &c.—See Principles, No. 108, 109, 110.

MIRACULOUS, ml-rák'kú-lús, a. Done by

↪ 559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fât 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pline 105, pîn 107—nô 102, môve 164, miracle, produced by miracle, effected by power more than natural.

MIRACULOUSLY, mē-rāk'-kū-lūs-lē, ad. By miracle, by power above that of nature.

MIRACULOUSNESS, mē-rāk'-kū-lūs-nēs, s. Superiority to natural power.

MIRTH, mērt'h, s. 108. Merriment, jollity, gayety, laughter.

MIRTHFUL, mērt'h-fūl, a. Merry, gay, cheerful.

MIRTHLESS, mērt'h-lēs, a. Joyless, cheerless.

MIRY, mī-rē, a. Deep in mud, muddy; consisting of mire.

MIS, mīs. An inseparable particle used in composition to mark an ill sense, or deprivation of the meaning, as chance, luck; mischance, ill luck; to like, to be pleased; to dislike, to be offended. It is derived from mes, in Teutonick and French, used in the same sense.

↪ What is remarkable in the pronunciation of this inseparable preposition is, that the s, whether the accent be on it or not, or whether it be followed by a sharp or flat consonant, always retains its sharp hissing sound; and never goes into z, like dis and ex. The reason seems to be, that the latter come to s compounded, and have their meaning so mingled with the word as to coalesce with it, while mis remains a distinct prefix, and has but one uniform meaning.

MISACCEPTATION, mīs-āk-sēp-tā'shūn, s. The act of taking in a wrong sense.

MISADVENTURE, mīs-ād-ven'tshūr, s. Mischance, misfortune, ill luck; in law, manslaughter.

MISCARRIAGE, mīs-kār-rīdje, s. 90. Unhappy event of an undertaking; abortion, act of bringing forth before the time.

To MISCARRY, mīs-kār-rē, v. n. To fail, not to have the intended event; to have an abortion.

MISCELLANEOUS, mīs-sēl-lā-nē-ūs, a. Mingled, composed of various kinds.

MISCELLANEOUSNESS, mīs-sēl-lā-nē-ūs-nēs, s. Composition of various kinds.

MISCELLANY, mīs-sēl-lēn-ē, a. 503. Mixed of various kinds.

↪ The accent on the first syllable of this word, which is the accentuation of all our orthoëpists, except Dr. Kenrick, is a proof of the tendency to follow the secondary accent of the original Latin word, notwithstanding the double consonant in the middle. Thus Miscellanea, in our pronunciation of it, having a stress on the first, becomes the accent when the word is anglicised by dropping a syllable.—See Academy, Mamillary, and Medullary.

MISCELLANY, mīs-sēl-lēn-ē, s. A mass or collection formed out of various kinds.

To MISCAST, mīs-kāst, v. a. To take a wrong account of.

To MISCHIEF, mīs'tshīf, v. a. To hurt, to harm, to injure.

MISCHIEFMAKER, mīs'tshīf-mā'kūr, s. One who causes mischief.

MISCHIEVOUS, mīs'tshē-vūs, a. 277. Harmful, hurtful, destructive; spiteful, malicious.

↪ There is an accentuation of this word upon the second syllable, chiefly confined to the vulgar, which, from its agreeableness to analogy, is well worthy of being adopted by the learned. Analogy certainly requires that the verb formed from the noun mischief should be mischieve, as from thief, thieve; grief, grieve; belief, believe; &c. with the accent on the second syllable, 492, and from such a verb would naturally be formed the adjective in question. But what analogy can give sanction to a vulgarism? What Pope observes of the learned in another case, is but too applicable in this:

“So much they scorn the crowd, that if the throng
“By chance go right, they purposely go wrong.”

To which we may add, that in language, as in many other cases, it is safer to be wrong with the polite than right with the vulgar.

MISCHIEVOUSLY, mīs'tshē-vūs-lē, ad. Noxiously, hurtfully, wickedly.

MISCHIEVOUSNESS, mīs'tshē-vūs-nēs, s. Hurtfulness, perniciousness, wickedness.

MISCIBLE, mīs-sē-bl, a. 405. Possible to be mingled.

MISTA'EN, mis-tâne'. Pret. and part. pass. of Mistake, poetically for Mistaken.

To BE MISTAKEN, mis-tâ-ken', 103. To err.

Dr. Johnson says this word has a kind of reciprocal sense. I mistake is like the French Je me trompe: I am mistaken means I misconceive, I am in an error, more frequently than I am ill understood; but, my opinion is mistaken, means my opinion is not rightly understood. Whatever may have been the cause of this irregularity, it has long been an eye-sore to our grammarians, but has got such possession of the language as to render it almost incurable. Let us avoid it as much as we will in speaking and writing, it will still remain upon our books as a part of the language. Mistaken wretch for mistaking wretch, is an apostrophe that occurs every where among our poets, particularly those of the stage; the most incorrigible of all, and the most likely to fix and disseminate an error of this kind. Our old writers were ignorant of Grammar, and thought all phrases good that did not quarrel with the ear; but that is not the case since the labours of Johnson and Lowth. The best way therefore to remedy these abuses, is to avoid them in future. With respect to Dr. Johnson's opinion, that this verb is used in a reciprocal sense, it may be observed, that this is the case with all neuter verbs of action; or, as Dr. Lowth calls them, intransitively active, or transitively neuter; but the verb in question, I am mistaken, for I am mistaking, seems rather to be what the Latins call a verb Dependent; an active verb with a passive form; an irregularity which is no recommendation to the Latin language, and is a blemish in ours. I recollect but one verb more of this kind; and that is, to speed in the sense of succeed well or ill, which, as a verb neuter, ought to have no passive form; and yet Pope says,

"A dire dilemma! either way I'm sped;
If foes, they write; if friends, they read me dead."
And Otway, in the Orphan, says,
"..... I'm marry'd—Death, I'm sped."

MISTLIKE, mist-lîke', a. Like a mist.

MISTOLD, mis-tôld', Part. pass. of Mistell.

MISTOOK, mis-tôok', Part. pass. of Mistake.

MISTRESS, mis-trîs', s. A woman who governs, correlative to subject or to servant; a title of common respect; a woman skilled in any thing; a woman teacher; a woman beloved and courted; a term of contemptuous address; a whore, a concubine.

The same haste and necessity of despatch, which has corrupted Master into Mister, has, when it is a title of civility only, contracted Mistress into Missis. Thus, Mrs. Montague, Mrs. Carter, &c. are pronounced Missis Montague, Missis Carter, &c. To pronounce the word as it is written, would, in these cases, appear quaint and pedantic.

MISTRUST, mis-trûst', s. Diffidence, suspicion, want of confidence.

To MISTRUST, mis-trûst', v. a. To suspect, to doubt, to regard with diffidence.

MISTRUSTFUL, mis-trûst-fûl', a. Diffident, doubting.

MISTRUSTFULNESS, mis-trûst-fûl-nês', s. Diffidence, doubt.

MISTRUSTFULLY, mis-trûst-fûl-lé, ad. With suspicion, with mistrust.

MISTRUSTLESS, mis-trûst-lês', a. Confident, unsuspecting.

MISTY, mis-té', a. Clouded, overspread with mists; obscure.

To MISUNDERSTAND, mis-ûn-dûr-stând', v. a. To misconceive.

MISUSAGE, mis-û-zîdje', s. 90. Abuse, ill use; bad treatment.

To MISUSE, mis-ûze', v. a. 437. To treat or use improperly, to abuse.

MISUSE, mis-ûse', s. 437. Bad use.

To MISWEEN, mis-wêen', v. n. To misjudge, to distrust. Obsolete.

MISY, mis-sé', s. A kind of mineral much resembling the golden marcasite.

MITE, mîte', s. A small insect found in cheese or corn, a weevil; the twentieth part of a grain; any thing proverbially small; a small particle.

MITELLA, mî-tê-lâ', s. 129. 92. A plant.

MITHRIDATE, mî-tê-rê-dâte', s. Mithridate was formerly, before medicine was simplified, one of the capital medicines of the shops, consisting of a great number of ingredients, and has its name from its inventor, Mithridates, king of Pontus.

MITIGANT, mî-tê-gânt', a. Lenient, lenitive.

To MITIGATE, mî-tê-gâte', v. a. 91. To soften; to alleviate; to mollify; to cool, to moderate.

MITIGATION, mî-tê-gâ-shûn', s. Abatement of any thing penal, harsh, or painful.

MITRE, mî-tûr', s. 416. A kind of episcopal crown.

MITRED, mî-tûrd', a. 359. Adorned with a mitre.

MITTENS, mî-tînz', s. 99. Coarse gloves for the winter; gloves that cover the arm without covering the fingers.

MITTIMUS, mî-tê-mûs', s. A warrant to commit an offender to prison.

To MIX, mîks', v. a. To unite different bodies into one mass, to put various ingredients together; to mingle.

MIXTION, mîks-tshûn', s. 464. Mixture, confusion of one body with another.

MIXTLY, mîkst-lé', ad. With coalition of different parts into one.

MIXTURE, mîks'tshûre, s. 461. The act of mixing, the state of being mixed; a mass formed by mingled ingredients; that which is added and mixed.

MIZMAZE, mîz'máze, s. A labyrinth.

MIZZEN, mîz'zn, s. 103. The mizzen is a mast in the stern of a ship.

MNEMONICKS, nè-môn'niks, s. The art of memory.—See Pneumatik.

Mr. Sheridan is the only lexicographer who gives the sounds of the letters, that has inserted this word, except Mr. Barclay. The former spells the word mne-mon-iks, and leaves us to pronounce the first syllable as we can; while the latter leaves out the m, and spells the word nemonicks; which, in my opinion, is the way it ought to be pronounced.

MO, mò, a. More in number.—See Enow.

To MOAN, mòne, v. a. 295. To lament, to deplore.

To MOAN, mòne, v. n. To grieve, to make lamentation.

MOAN, mòne, s. Audible sorrow.

MOAT, mòte, s. 295. A canal of water round a house for defence.

To MOAT, mòte, v. a. To surround with canals by way of defence.

MOB, mòb, s. The crowd; a tumultuous riot; a kind of female lead-dress.

Toller tells us, that in the latter end of the reign of King Charles II. the rabble that attended the Earl of Shaftsbury's partisans was first called mobile vulgus, and afterwards by contraction the mob; and ever since the word has become proper English. To which we may add, that in Mr. Addison's time this word was not adopted; for he says, Spectator, No. 135. "I dare not answer that mob, rep, pos, incog, and the like," will not in time be jooled upon as part of our tongue.

To MOB, mòb, v. a. To harass or overbear by tumult.

MOBBISH, mòb'bîsh, a. Mean, done after the manner of the mob.

To MOBLE, mò'bl, v. a. To dress grossly or inelegantly. Obsolete.

This word now exists as spoken, no where but in the Hamlet of Shakespeare:

"But who, alas! had seen the mobled queen?"

This is always pronounced mobbed upon the stage; and this reading appears more correct than mabled and mob-led, which some critics have substituted; for Dr. Farmer tells us he has met with this word in Shirley's Gentleman of Venice:

"The moon does mobble up herself."

This seems to receive confirmation from the name women give to a cap, which is little more than a piece of linen drawn together with strings round the head. The learned Mr. Upton's supposition, that this word signifies led by the mob, is an anachronism, as the word mob was not in use in the time of Shakespeare.

MOBBY, mòb'bé, s. An American drink made of potatoes.

MOBILE, mò-béél, s. 112. 140. The populace, the rout, the mob.

MOBILITY, mò-bîl'le-té, s. Nimbleness, activity; in cant language, the populace; fickleness, inconstancy.

MONAD, { môⁿ-nâd, or }
MONADE, { môⁿ-nâd, } s. An indivisible thing.
 ☞ Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Nares are the only orthoëpists who determine the quantity of the first vowel in this word; which they do by making it short. The only reason that can be given is the omicron in the Greek μοναδος; and what a miserable reason is this when in our pronunciation of the Greek word we make it long!—See Principles, No. 543, 544, &c.
MONARCH, môⁿ-nârk, s. A governor invested with absolute authority, a king; one superiour to the rest of the same kind; president.
MONARCHAL, môⁿ-nârk-kâl, a. 353. Suiting a monarch, regal, princely, imperial.

MONOGRAM, môn'nô-grâm, s. A cipher, a character compounded of several letters.

MONOLOGUE, môn'nô-lôg, s. 338. A scene in which a person of the drama speaks by himself; a soliloquy.

↳ Why Mr. Sheridan should pronounce dialogue with the last syllable like log, prologue with the same syllable like lug, and monologue rhyming with vogue, I cannot conceive. The final syllable of all words of this termination, when unaccented, are, in my opinion, uniformly like that in dialogue. Mr. Scott has marked it in the same manner as I have done; Mr. Barclay has followed Mr. Sheridan.

MONOME, môn'nôme, s. In algebra, a quantity that has but one denomination or name.

MONOMACHY, mô-nôm'â-kê, s. A duel; a single combat.

↳ Nothing can more show the uncertainty of our orthoepists in the pronunciation of unusual words, than the accentuation of this, and those of a similar form. The only words of this termination we have in Johnson's Dictionary, are, logomachy, monomachy, sciomachy, and theomachy. The two first of which he accents on the first syllable, and the two last on the second. Mr. Sheridan has but two of them, logomachy and sciomachy; the first of which he accents on the first syllable, and the last on the second. Mr. Scott has none of them. Pr. Ash has them all, and accents logomachy, monomachy, and theomachy, on the first syllable; and sciomachy on the second. Bailey accents monomachy and sciomachy on the first syllable, and logomachy and theomachy on the third. W. Johnston has only logomachy, which he accents on the second syllable. Mr. Perry has only theomachy, which he accents on the second likewise. Entick has them all, and accents them on the first; and Dr. Kenrick accents them all on the second syllable.

This confusion among our orthoepists plainly shows the little attention which is paid to analogy; for this would have informed them, that these words are under the same predicament as those ending in graphy, logy, &c. and therefore ought all to have the antepenultimate accent. An obscure idea of this induced them to accent some of these words one way, and some another; but nothing can be more evident than the necessity of accenting all of them uniformly on the same syllable.—See Principles, No. 513, 518, &c.

As to Dr. Johnson's observation, which is repeated by Dr. Kenrick and Mr. Nares, that sciomachy ought to be written skiamachy, I have only to observe at present, that writing a instead of o is more agreeable to etymology; but changing c into k, either in writing or pronouncing, is an irregularity of the most pernicious kind, as it has a tendency to overturn the most settled rules of the language.—See Sceptick, and Principles, No. 350.

MONOPETALOUS, môn'nô-pêt-tâl-lûs, a. It is used for such flowers as are formed out of one leaf, howsoever they may be seemingly cut into small ones.

MONOPOLIST, mô-nôp'pô-list, s. One who by engrossing or patent obtains the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

To MONOPOLISE, mô-nôp'pô-lîze, v. a. To have the sole power or privilege of vending any commodity.

MONOPTOTE, môn'nôp'tôte, or mô-nôp'tôte, s. Is a noun used only in some one oblique case.

↳ The second pronunciation, which is Dr. Johnson's, Dr. Ash's, Mr. Barclay's, and Entick's, is the most usual; but the first, which is Mr. Sheridan's, is more agreeable to analogy; for the word is derived from monoptoton; which we pronounce with two accents, one on the first, and another on the third; and when we shorten the word by anglicising it, we generally place the accent on the syllable we accented in the original.—See Heteroclitite.

MONOSTICH, môn'nô-stîk, s. 509. A composition of one verse.

MONOSTROPHIC, môn'ô-strôf'fik, a. Written in unvaried metre.

MONSTER, môn'stûr, s. 98. Something out of the common order of nature; something horrible for deformity, wickedness, or mischief.

To MONSTER, môn'stûr, v. a. To put out of the common order of things. Not used.

MONSTROSITY, môn-strôs'sê-tê, s. The state of being monstrous, or out of the common order of the universe.

MONSTROUS, môn'strûs, a. Deviating from the stated order of nature; strange, wonderful; irregular, enormous, shocking, hateful.

MONSTROUSLY, môn'strûs-lê, ad. Exceedingly, very much.

MONSTROUSLY, môn'strûs-lê, ad. In a manner out of the common order of nature, shockingly, terribly, horribly; to a great or enormous degree.

MONSTROUSNESS, môn'strûs-nês, s. Enormity, irregular nature or behaviour.

MONTH, mûnth, s. 165. One of the twelve principal divisions of the year; the space of four weeks.

MONTH'S-MIND, mûnth's-mînd', s. Longing desire.

MONTHLY, mûnth'lê, a. Continuing a month; performed in a month; happening every month.

MONTHLY, mûnth'lê, ad. Once in a month.

MONUMENT, môn'nû-mênt, s. 179. Any thing by which the memory of persons or things is preserved, a memorial; a tomb, a cenotaph.

↳ There are no words in which inaccurate speakers are more apt to err, than where u is not under the accent. Thus we frequently hear, from speakers, not of the lowest class, this word pronounced as if written monement.

MONUMENTAL, môn'nû-mên'tâl, a. Memorial,

There is an incorrect pronunciation of this and similar words, chiefly among the vulgar, which is, sounding the word as if it were written mo-old. This sound is often heard among incorrect speakers, where there is no diphthong, as in cold, bold, sold, &c. pronounced co-old, bo-old, so-old, &c. while the true pronunciation of these words has nothing of the o or oo in it, but is exactly like foal'd, sol'd, cojal'd, &c. the preterits of the verbs to foal, to sole, and to cajole, &c. For there is no middle sound between oul and hole; and the words in question must either rhyme with howl'd or foal'd; but the last is clearly the true pronunciation.

This word, before Dr. Johnson wrote his Dictionary, was frequently written mold, which was perfectly agreeable to its Saxon derivation, and was less liable to mispronunciation than the present spelling. The word has three significations: Mould, concretions occasioned by decay; whence to moulder, to waste away; mould, or earth, that to which decay reduces bodies; and a mould, a form to cast metals in. A diversity of pronunciation has endeavoured to distinguish the first of these senses from the rest, by sounding it so as to rhyme with howl'd; but these distinctions of sound under the same spelling, ought to be as much as possible avoided. For the reasons see Bowl.

→ The vowel u, in the first syllable of this and similar words, forms a remarkable exception to the shortening power of the antepenultimate and secondary accent; any other vowel but u, unless followed by a diphthong, would have been short. This arises from no regard to the Latin quantity in the word Muculentus, for the u in culinary, and mutilate, &c. is long in English, though short in the Latin culinaris, mutilo, &c. So that the long u in this and similar words is an idiom of our own pronunciation, 508. 511. 530.

MUG, môg, s. A cup to drink out of.

MUGGY, môg^g-gê, } a. 383. Moist, damp.

→ It is highly probable that this word is a corruption of murky, which Johnson and other writers explain by dark, cloudy, &c. But Skinner tells us it is used in Lincolnshire to signify darkness, accompanied by heat; and as this temperament of the weather is commonly accompanied by moisture, the word is generally used to signify a dark, close, warm, and moist state of the air. As this word is not very legitimately derived, it is seldom heard among the learned and polite; but as it affords us a new complex idea, and is in much use among the middle ranks of life, it seems not unworthy of being adopted.

MY, ml, or mê, pron. poss. Belonging to me.
 ⚡ There is a puzzling diversity to foreigners in the pronunciation of this word, and sometimes to natives, when they read, which ought to be explained. It is certain that the pronoun my, when it is contradistinguished from any other possessive pronoun, and consequently emphatical, is always pronounced with its full, open sound, rhyming with fy; but when there is no such emphasis, it falls exactly into the sound of me, the oblique case of I. Thus, if I were to say, My pen is as bad as my naper, I should necessarily pronounce my like me, as in this sentence pen and paper are the emphatical words; but if I were to say, My pen is worse than yours, here my is in opposition to yours, and must, as it is emphatical, be pronounced so as to rhyme with high, nigh, &c.

NARRABLE, nár^lrá-bl, a. 81. 405. Capable to be told.

To NARRATE, nár^lrâte, v. a. 91. To relate, to tell.

Dr. Johnson says this word is only used in Scotland; but as it is regularly derived from the Latin narro, and has a specific meaning to distinguish it from every other word, it ought to be considered as a necessary part of the language. To tell seems to imply communication in the most general sense: as, to tell a story, to tell a secret, &c. To relate, is to tell at some length, and in some order, as to relate the particulars of a transaction: but to narrate seems to relate a transaction in order, from beginning to end; which often becomes insipid and tiresome. Hence the beauty of Pope's—narrative old age:

“The poor, the rich, the valiant, and the sage,
“And boasting youth, and narrative old age.”

NARRATION, nár^lrát-shún, s. Account, relation, history.

NATURE, ná^ltshúre, s. 293. An imaginary being supposed to preside over the material and animal world; the native state or properties of any thing; the constitution of an animated body; disposition of mind; the regular course of things; the compass of natural existence; natural affection, or reverence; the state or operation of the material world; sort, species.

There is a vulgar pronunciation of this word as if written na-ter, which cannot be too carefully avoided. Some critics have contended, that it ought to be pronounced as if written nate-yure; but this pronunciation comes so near to that here adopted, as scarcely to be distinguishable from it. T before y, which is the letter long a begins with, s, approaches so near to sh, as, in the absence of accent, naturally to fall into it, in the same manner as s becomes zh in leisure, pleasure, &c. The sibilant and aspiration of t in this and similar words, provided they are not too coarsely pronounced, are so far from being a deformity in our language, by increasing the number of hissing sounds, as some have insinuated, that they are a real beauty; and, by a certain coalescence and flow of sound, contribute greatly to the smoothness and volubility of pronunciation.—See Principles, No. 459, 460, 461, &c.

→ In this word of our own composition from nice, we have unaccountably run into the pronunciation of the mute c. This word we always hear pronounced in three syllables, though safety, ninety, and surety, are ever heard in two. This is a proof how much mere similitude of sound often operates in fixing pronunciation: the termination ty, being almost always preceded by e or i in words of Latin or French formation, where these vowels form distinct syllable, as variety, gayety, anxiety, society, &c. Words of mere English formation that approach to them are thus carried into the same pronunciation by bare likeness of sound only.

NICHE, nîsh, s. 352. A hollow in which a statue may be placed.

NICK, nîk, s. Exact point of time at which there

- ↳ W. Johnston and Entick are the only orthoëpists who adopt the first mode of accenting this word; while Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Buchanan, Perry, and Barclay, adopt the last. Mr. Scott adopts both, but seems to give the latter the preference by placing it first. The accentuation of this word must be determined by that of obdurate, from which it is derived. It seems, however, to follow the example of accuracy, procuracy, &c. in throwing the accent on the first syllable. As there are some terminations which seem to attract the accent to the latter syllables, as ator, end, &c. as spectator, observator, &c. comprehend, apprehend, &c. so there are others that seem to repel it to the beginning of the word, as acy, ary, &c. as efficacy, optimacy, contumacy, &c. salutary, tributary, adversary, &c. The word in question seems to be of the latter class, and therefore more analogically pronounced with the accent on the first than on the second syllable.—See Obdurate.
- OB DURATE, ôb-jû-râ-te, or ôb-dû-râ-te, a. 91, 293, 294, 503. Hard of heart, inflexibly obstinate in ill, hardened; firm, stubborn; harsh, rugged.
- ↳ This word is pronounced with the accent on the second syllable by Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, Mr. Nares, Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Barclay, Buchanan, and Mr. Perry; and on the first by Bailey, Entick, and W. Johnston. Mr. Scott accents it either on the first or second, but seems to give the preference to the latter. The poets are decidedly in favour of the penultimate accent; and when the usage of poetry does not contradict any plain analogy of prosaic pronunciation, it certainly has a respectable authority. But the verb to indurate is a word of exactly the same form, and has the same derivation; and yet Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Barclay, and Entick, place the accent on the first syllable: and my observation fails me if there is not a strong propensity in custom to place the accent on the first syllable of the word in question. This propensity, as there is a plain analogy in favour of it, ought, in my opinion, to be indulged. To indurate is a verb derived from the Latin induro, forming its participle in atus; and words of this kind are generally anglicised by the termination ate, and have the accent at least as high as the antepenultimate: thus, from deparare, propagare, desolare, &c. are formed to deparate, to propagate, to desolate, &c. and, without recurring to the Latin induratus, we form the regular participle indurated, from the verb to indurate. But though there is the Latin verb obdure, we have not formed an English verb from it in ate as in the former case, but derive the adjective obdurate from the Latin participial adjective obduratus; and no analogy can be more uniform than that of removing the accent two syllables higher than in the original: thus, desperate, profligate, and defecate, have the accent on the first syllable; and desperatus, profligatus, and defecatus, on the third. Agreeably, therefore, to every analogy of derivation, obdurate ought to have the accent on the first syllable; and as poets have adopted the other accentuation, we must, as in medicinal, and in some other words, admit of a poetical and a prosaic pronunciation, rather than cross so clear an analogy in favour of poetry, which is so frequently at variance with prose, and sometimes with itself.—See Academy and Incomparable.
- OB DURATELY, ôb-jû-râ-t-lê, ad. Stubbornly, inflexibly.
- OB DURATENESS, ôb-jû-râ-t-nêss, s. Stubbornness, inflexibility, impenitence.
- OB DURATION, ôb-jû-râ-shûn, s. Hardness of heart.
- OB DURED, ôb-dûrd, a. 359. Hardened, inflexible.
- OBEDIENCE, ô-bê-jê-ânse, s. 293, 376. Obedience, submission to authority.
- ↳ The o, which forms the first syllable of this word, though not under the accent, may occasionally be pronounced as long and open as the o in oval, over, &c. (see Efface); and though in rapid pronunciation it admits of a short obscure sound, common to some of the other vowels when unaccented, yet its radical sound, or that which it acquires on the least distinctness or solemnity, is undoubtedly the long open o before mentioned. Thus in that fugitive pronunciation which has no existence but in the ear, and can hardly be expressed to the eye by a correspondent sound, we perceive very little difference in the sound of the initial vowels of abound, upbratid, and obedience; yet the moment we dwell with the least distinctness on these letters, the a in abound verges to the a in father; the u has the short sound we hear in the preposition up; and the o in obedience becomes open, as the first sound of that letter in the alphabet. The same may be observed of the o in opaque, opinion, and every initial o ending a syllable immediately before the accent.—See Principles, No. 98.

OBEDIENT, ó-bé-jé-ént, a. Submissive to authority, compliant with command or prohibition, obsequious.

OBEDIENTIAL, ó-bé-jé-én-shál, a. According to the rule of obedience.

OBEDIENTLY, ó-bé-jé-ént-lé, ad. With obedience.

OBEISANCE, ó-bá-sånse, s. 250. A bow, a courtesy, an act of reverence.

→ I must retract my former pronunciation of this word, which made the diphthong ei like e in obedience, and adopt the sound of a as in the ey of obey. For the former sound we have Mr. Sheridan; Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Perry; and for the latter, Mr. Nares, Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Scott, and W. Johnston. But if the authorities for this pronunciation were less weighty than they are, analogy would be clearly on the side I have adopted, as ei, when under the accent, is much more frequently pronounced like ey in obey than like ey in key; the latter word and ley being the only exceptions to the general rule of pronouncing ey when accented; and these letters we know are perfectly equivalent to ei, 296.

OCCASION, ôk-ká-zhùn, s. Occurrence, casualty, incident; opportunity, convenience; accidental cause; reason, not cogent, but opportune; incidental need, casual exigence.

↳ What was observed of the e in Efface is applicable to the o in the first syllable of this word. From the tendency of the vowel to open, when immediately preceding the accent, we find elegant speakers sometimes pronounce the o in occasion, offend, officious, &c. as if written o-casion, o-fend, o-ficious, &c. This seems to be one of those "faults true critics dare not mend." But as it is an evident deviation from the orthography, I have not dared to mark these words in this manner.—See Efface. It must, however, be remarked, that this deviation only takes place before double c in the word occasion and its compounds.

To OCCASION, ôk-ká-zhùn, v. a. To cause casually; to cause, to produce; to influence.

OCCASIONAL, ôk-ká-zhùn-ál, a. Incidental, casual; producing by accident; producing by occasion or incidental exigence.

ODOROUS, ô-dô-r-ûs, a. 314. Fragrant, perfumed.

↳ It is not a little strange that this adjective should have preserved the accent of the simple odour, when the Latin odorus presented so fair an opportunity of altering it. Milton has seized this opportunity; but, happily for the analogy of our own language, it has not been followed:

“..... Last the bright consummate flow’r “Spirits odorous breathes; flow’rs and their fruit
“Man’s nourishment.”.....

Where we may observe, that if the Latin accent be preserved, the Latin spelling ought to be preserved likewise.

OMNIPRESENCE, ôm-né-préz'énse, s. Ubiquity, unbounded presence.

↪ All the orthoëpists I have consulted (as far as can be gathered from their notation and accentuation) make the penultimate e in this word short, as in the word presence, except Mr. Sheridan. That it is not pronounced enclitically like omnipotence, 513. 518. arises, perhaps, from the number of consonants in the latter syllables; and as this is the case, it seems most agreeable to the nature of our composition to pronounce presence in this word, in the same manner as when it is taken singly; just as we pronounce theatre in the word amphitheatre, with the accent on the antepenultimate, though the accent is on the penultimate, and the vowel is long, in the Latin amphitheatrum.

OMNIPRESENT, ôm-né-préz'ént, a. Ubiquitary, present in every place.

ONE, wún, a. 165. Less than two, single, denoted by an unit; indefinitely, any; different, diverse, opposed to Another; One of two, opposed to the other; particularly one.

☞ This word and its relatives, once and none, are perhaps the best tests of a residence in the capital. In some parts of the island they are pronounced so as to give the o the sound it has in tone, sometimes the sound it has in gone; but the true sound is that it has in son, done, &c. which is perfectly equivalent to the sound of u in sun. I never could make a northern inhabitant of England pronounce the following sentence without the greatest difficulty: "I have won one game, and you have won none; you have not won once, and that is wonderful." Where we may observe that the o in won, is the exact sound it has in one, once, and wonderful.

ONE, wún, s. A single person; a single mass or aggregate; the first hour; the same thing; a person; a person by way of eminence; a distinct or particular person; persons united; concord, agreement, one mind; any person, any man indefinitely. One has sometimes a plural, when it stands for persons indefinitely, as the great Ones of the world.

ONE-EYED, wún-lde, a. 283. Having only one eye.

ONEIROCRITICAL, ó-ní-rò-krít-té-kál, a. Properly Onirocritical. Interpretative of dreams.

ONOMATOPOEIA, ón-ó-mát-ó-pé-yá, s. In Grammar or Rhetorick, a figure of speech whereby names and words are formed to the resemblance of the sound made by the things signified.

☞ This word is formed from the Greek ὄνομα, name, and ποιέω, make, I make or feign. Thus is the word triquetack formed from the noise made by moving the men at this game; and from the same source arises the buzzing of bees, the grunting of hogs, the cackling of hens, the snoring of people asleep, the clashing of arms, &c. The surest etymologies are those derived from the Onomatopoeia.

ONSET, ón-sét, s. Attack, assault, first brunt.

ONSLAUGHT, ón-sláwt, s. Attack, storm, onset. Not used.

ONTOLOGIST, ón-tól-ló-jíst, s. One who considers the affections of being in general, a metaphysician.

OPERATOR, ôp-pêr-râ-tûr, s. 321. One that performs any act of the hand, one who produces any effect.

OPEROSE, ôp-pêr-rôse, a. Laborious.

OPHITES, ô-fî-tîz, s. A stone. Ophites has a dusky greenish ground, with spots of a lighter green.

OPHTHALMICK, ôp-thâl-mîk, a. Relating to the eye.

↗ Two aspirations in succession, says Mr. Elphinston, seem disagreeable to an English ear, and therefore one of them is generally sunk. Thus diphthong and triphthong are pronounced diphthong and triphthong. P is lost as well as h in apophthegm; and therefore it is no wonder we hear the first h dropped in ophthalmic and ophthalmick, which is the pronunciation I have adopted as agreeable to analogy. Nay, such an aversion do we seem to have to a succession of aspirates, that the h is sunk in Isthmus, Esther, and Demosthenes, because the s, which is akin to the aspiration, immediately precedes. Mr. Sheridan pronounces the first syllable of this word like off, but the first of diphthong and triphthong, like dip and trip. Mr. Scit, W. Johnston, and Mr. Perry, have not got this word, but pronounce diphthong and triphthong in the same manner as Mr. Sheridan. Dr. Kenrick also wants the word; he gives no pronunciation to diphthong, but makes the h silent in triphthong; while Barclay pronounces the h in ophthalmick, but makes it either way in diphthong, and silent in triphthong. It may be remarked, that Dr. Jones, who wrote a Spelling Dictionary in Queen Anne's time, made the h in these two words silent.

OPHTHALMY, ôp-thâl-mê, s. A disease of the eyes.

OPiate, ô-pê-ât, s. 91. A medicine that causes sleep.

OPiate, ô-pê-ât, a. 91. Soporiferous, narcotick.

OPprobriously, ôp-prô-brê-ûs-lê, ad. Reproachfully, scurrilously.

OPprobriousness, ôp-prô-brê-ûs-nêss, s. Reproachfulness, scurrility.

To OPpugn, ôp-pûne, v. a. 386. To oppose, to attack, to resist.

OPpugnancy, ôp-pûg-nân-sê, s. Opposition.

OPpugner, ôp-pûne-ûr, s. One who opposes or attacks.

↗ Mr. Sheridan sounds the g in this word, though not in the verb from which it is formed; but that this is contrary to analogy.—See Principles, No. 386.

OPsMATHY, ôp-sîm-â-thê, s. 518. An education begun late in life; knowledge or learning acquired in age.

OPtABLE, ôp-tâ-bl, a. 405. Desirable, to be wished.

OPtative, ôp-tâ-tîv, or ôp-tâ-tîv, a. 505. Expressive of desire; the name of that mood of a verb which expresses desire.

↗ Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, Entick, Barclay, and Buchanan, accent this word on the first syllable; and Dr. Kenrick, Bailey, W. Johnston, and Mr. Perry on the second. That the last is more general, particularly in Grammar schools, will be readily acknowledged; but that the first is more correct and agreeable to analogy, cannot be denied: for this word is not so naturally derived from the classical optatus, as the lower Latin optativus; and why this word should transfer its penultimate accent to the first syllable of the English word, may be seen under the words Academy, Incomparable, &c.

Upon a more mature recollection of the analogies of the language, I am still more convinced of the justness of the decision on the accentuation of this word. A critic, with whom I lately conversed upon it, contended that the accent ought to be upon the a, because it was on that letter in the preterperfect tense of the verb opto, optavi. I desired him to put his argument into form, and tell me whether all words of this termination were to have the same accent as in the preterperfect tense of the verb.—Here he could go no farther: I could have immediately confronted him with tentative, from tento, tentavi; with negative, from nego, negavi; with vocative, from voco, vocavi; and twenty other examples, which would have shown the weakness of his reasoning; and yet this critic is a real scholar, a man of good sense and great acuteness.—See Principles, No. 503, on the influence of the Greek and Latin accent on that of the English; No. 544, on the influence of the Greek and Latin quantity on that of the English; and No. 512, on the terminations ative and atory.

ORATOR, ôr-râ-tûr, s. 168. 503. A public speaker, a man of eloquence; petitioner. This sense is used in address to chancery.

ORATORIAL, ôr-râ-tô-rê-âl, a. 92. Rhetorical, florid.

☞ I have inserted this word, though omitted by almost all our lexicographers, because I have met with it in authors of reputation. Dr. Foster, in his Treatise on Accent and Quantity, says, "The connexion of this, which may be called the oratorical accent, with the syllabic, and the subordination of them to each other, however difficult it may appear, is yet easy in practice," page 23. Other good authorities for this word might have been adduced, but the other adjective oratorical, though not so justly formed, seems generally to be preferred. I have sometimes made the experiment on people, whose ears were nicely set to pure English pronunciation, by proposing to them for their choice the adjectives oratorical or oratoral, and have always found them prefer the latter. This may, in some measure, arise from supposing the former might be considered as the adjective of oratorio, but seems rather to be occasioned by too great a plenitude and rotundity of sound, which is not agreeable to the genius of our language: for if we regard derivation only, the adjective ought to be oratorial, as derived immediately from the Latin oratorius, in the same manner as from rhetoricus, is formed rhetorical.

ORATORICAL, ôr-râ-tô-rê-kâl, a. Rhetorical, besetting an orator.

ORATORIO, ôr-râ-tô-rê-ô, s. An Italian word, used to signify a kind of sacred drama, generally taken from the Scriptures, and set to music.

ORCHANET, ôr²-kâ-nêt, s. An herb.

ORCHARD, ôr²-tshûrd, s. 88. A garden of fruit trees.

ORCHESTRE, ôr²-kês-tûr, s. 416. The place where the musicians are set at a publick show.

☞ This word is accented on the first syllable by Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, Mr. Nares, Buchanan, Entick, Perry, and Barclay; and by Mr. Ballely and W. Johnston on the second; and by Dr. Kenrick on either. The first mode has not only the majority of votes in its favour, but is agreeable to the general analogy of words of three syllables, which, when not of our own formation, commonly adopt the antepenultimate accent. The exception to this rule will be found under the next word.

ORCHESTRA, ôr²-kês-trâ, s. 503. A part of the theatre appropriated to the musicians.

☞ Dr. Johnson has preferred the French orchestre to the Latin orchestra, and the Greek ὀρχήστρα; but as we find the latter spelling and pronunciation universally adopted; and as we take almost every other term of art rather from the Greek than any other language, I have ventured to insert it in that dress, after Chambers, and some other very respectable authors.

This word is accented on the first syllable by Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, Entick, and Barclay; but Mr. Nares says it is accented on the second, as I have given it. For notwithstanding the numbers against me, the very general rule is on my side; which is, that when we adopt a word whole from the Latin or Greek, it ought to have the same accent as in those languages.—See Principles, No. 503.

ORISON, 3r-rê-zûn, s. 168. A prayer, a supplication.

→ Mr. Sheridan has adopted the other spelling from the French oraison; but Dr. Johnson, and all the writers he quotes, spell the word in the manner I have done. Dr. Johnson tells us this word is variously accented; that Shakespeare has the accent both on the first and second syllables, Milton and Crashaw on the first, and others on the second.

"The fair Ophelia! Nymph, in thy orisons Be all my sins remembered." Hamlet
"Alas! your too much love and care of me
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch."
Henry the Fifth
"My wakeful lay shall knock
At th' oriental gates, and duly mock
The early lark's shrill orisons to be
An sothem at the day's nativity."
Crashaw
"His daily orisons attract our ears."
Saunders
"Lowly they bow'd adoring, and began
Their orisons each morning duly paid."
Milton
"So went he on with his orisons;
"Which, if you mark them well, were wise ones."
Colton
"Here, at dead of night,
The hermit oft 'mid his orisons hears
Aghast the voice of time departing tow'rs."
Dyer
"The midnight clock attests my fervent prayers,
The rising sun my orisons declares."
Harte

Mr. Nares tells us he has no doubt that Milton's accentuation is right. This too is my opinion. Poets are not the best authorities, even when they are unanimous; but much worse when they differ from others, and even from themselves. We must therefore leave them the liberty of accenting both ways, either for the sake of the verse, the rhyme, the humour, or the affectation of singularity, and bring our reason for accenting this word in prose on the first syllable, from the very general rule in Principles, No. 503. Accordingly Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, Buchanan, W. Johnston, Barclay, Bailey, Perry, and Entick, uniformly place the accent on the first syllable; and Dr. Ash says it is sometimes accented on the second.

PAGEANT, pâd'jûnt, s. 244. A statue in a show; any show, a spectacle of entertainment.
 ☞ Mr. Perry, Buchanan, and Entick, pronounce the a in the first syllable long, like that in page; but Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Nares, make it short, as in pad: that the first is more analogical is evident, as the accented a is succeeded by the diphthong ea, 505, but that the last is more agreeable to general usage, I have not the least doubt. The same reason holds good for the first a in pageantry; but usage is still more decidedly for the short sound of the a in this word, than in pageant. Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry, and W. Johnston, adopt the short sound, and Entick alone the long one. About forty years ago, nör 167, nôt 163—tûbe 171, tûb 172, bûll 173—öil 299—pöund 313—thin 466, THIS 469.

PALFREY, pä'l-fré, or pä'l-fré, s. A small horse fit for ladies.

P In the first edition of this Dictionary I followed Mr. Sheridan, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, and Buchanan, in the sound of a in the first syllable of this word; but, upon maturer consideration, think Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Barclay, more analogical, and must therefore give the third sound of a the preference.—See Principles, No. 84.

☞ I have not found this word in any of our Dictionaries, but have met with it in so respectable a writer, that I cannot resist the temptation of inserting it here, especially as it serves to fill up a niche in language, which, I think, never should be empty: I mean, that wherever there is a noun established, there should always be a verb to correspond to it. The passage from which I have taken this word has so much real good sense, and such true genuine humour, that I cannot refrain from extracting the whole paragraph, and relying on the pardon of the inspector for the digression.—“It may be thought ridiculous to assert, that morals have any connexion with purity of language, or that the precision of truth may be violated through defect of critical exactness in the three degrees of comparison; yet how frequently do we hear, from the dealers in superlatives, of most admirable, super-excellent, and quite perfect people, who, to plain persons, not bred in the school of exaggeration, would appear mere common characters, not rising above the level of mediocrity! By this negligence in the just application of words, we shall be as much misled by these trope and figure ladies when they degrade, as when they panegyrize; for, to a plain and sober judgment, a tradesman may not be the most good-for-nothing fellow that ever existed, merely because it was impossible for him to exist, in an hour, an order which required a week; a lady may not be the most hideous fright the world ever saw, though the make of her gown may have been obsolete for a month; nor may one's young friend's father be a monster of cruelty, though he may be a quiet gentleman, who does not choose to live at watering-places, but likes to have his daughter stay at home with him in the country.”—Hannah More's Strictures on Modern Female Education, vol. i. page 216. If the usage of this word stood in need of farther support, we have it from the best authority. “The author thinks it superfluous to panegyrize truth; yet, in favour of sound and rational rules, (which must be founded in truth, or they are good for nothing,) he ventures to quote the Stagirite himself: It is not possible for a true opinion to be contrary to another true one.”—Harris's Philological Inquiries.

PANEL, pân-nîl, s. 99. A square, or piece of any matter inserted between other bodies; a schedule or roll, containing the names of such jurors as the sheriff provides to pass upon a trial.

PAPILLARY, pá-píl-á-ré, a. Having emulgent vessels, or resemblances of paps.
 ☞ There is a set of words of similar derivation and termination, which must be necessarily accented in the same way; these are, Axillary, Maxillary, Capillary, Papillary, Armillary, Mammillary, and Medullary. All these, except the last, which was not inserted, I had accented on the first syllable in a Rhyming and Pronouncing Dictionary, published thirty years ago. This accentuation I still think the most agreeable to analogy; and that the inspector may judge of the usage, I have subjoined the several different modes of accentuation of the different orthoépists:

Axillary,	Johnson, Kenrick.
Axillary,	Sheridan, Ash, Bailey.
Maxillary,	Johnson, Sheridan, Barclay.
Maxillary,	{ Ash, Kenrick, W. Johnston, Bailey
	{ Entick.
Capillary,	Johnson, Kenrick, Nares, Fenning.
Capillary,	{ Sheridan, Ash, W. Johnston, Perry,
	{ Buchanan, Bailey, Entick.
Papillary,	Johnson, Nares, Barclay, Fenning.
Papillary,	{ Sheridan, Kenrick, Ash, Scott, Perry,
	{ Buchanan, Bailey.
Pupillary,	{ Johnson, Sheridan, Kenrick, Ash,
	{ Scott, Perry, Entick, Barclay, Fenning.
Pupillary,	No examples.
Mammillary,	Nares, Bailey.
Mammillary,	{ Johnson, Kenrick, Ash, Sheridan,
	{ Scott, Perry, Entick.
Armillary,	{ Sheridan, Scott, Nares, Smith, Fenning.
Armillary,	Ash, Perry, Entick, Bailey, Barclay.
Medullary,	No examples.
Medullary,	{ Johnson, Sheridan, Ash, Kenrick,
	{ W. Johnston, Buchanan, Bailey,
	{ Barclay, Fenning, Entick.

This extract sufficiently shows how uncertain usage is, and the necessity of recurring to principles: and that these are on the side I have adopted, may be gathered from No. 512.—See Mammillary and Maxillary.

PAPILLOUS, pá-píl-lús, a. The same with Papillary.

☞ There is some diversity in the accentuation of this word, as well as the former: Dr. Johnson and Barclay place the accent on the first syllable; and Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, and Mr. Perry, on the second, as I have done.

To PARALYZE, pâr-â-lize, v. a. To weaken, to deprive of strength as if struck with a palsy.

→ The very general use of this word, especially since the French revolution, seems to entitle it to a place in the Dictionaries of our language; as it not only more forcibly expresses the common idea than to enervate or to deadens, but serves to fill up those vacancies in speech, where there is no verb to correspond to a substantive or adjective. Hence Pope's happy coinage of the verb to senualize, see the verb to Panegyrize. A happier instance of the use of this word, and a better authority for it, cannot be given than in Hannah More's Strictures on Education, vol. i. page 49, where, speaking of the philosophic and systematic vice of modern infidels on the Continent, she says: "This cool, calculating, intellectual wickedness, eats out the very heart and core of virtue, and, like a deadly mildew, blights and shrivels the blooming promise of the human spring. Its unbending touch communicates a torpid sluggishness, which paralyzes the soul. It descends on depravity, and details its grossest acts as frigidly as if its object were to allay the tumult of the passions, while it is letting them loose on mankind, by plucking off the muzzle of present restraint and future accountableness."

→ Dr. Johnson, in the folio edition of his Dictionary, places the accent on the penultimate syllable of this word, and Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Nares on the antepenultimate, and the latter make the e long. Dr. Johnson has several words of a similar termination for his accentuation; but analogy is clearer for Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Nares with respect to accent, and directly against them with respect to quantity; for it is not the long quantity of the original that can resist the shortening power of the English antepenultimate accent in this word, any more than in Diacresis, Ephemeris, &c. which see.

PARENT, pâr-rênt, s. A father or mother.

PAROQUET, pâ-ró-két, s. A small species of parrot.

PAROTID, pâ-rót-tíd, a. 503. Belonging to the glands under and behind the ear.

☞ In this, and the following word, Dr. Johnson places the accent on the antepenultimate syllable, but Mr. Sheridan and Dr. Ash much more properly on the penultimate, as here marked. It may, however, be observed, that Dr. Johnson's accentuation of this word is the more agreeable to analogy, as it comes from the Latin Parotides, which, according to the general rule, by losing a syllable, has its accent removed a syllable higher (see Academy); but the succeeding word, Parotis, is a perfect Latin word, and therefore preserves its Latin accent on the penultimate.—See Principles, No. 503, b, and the word Irrepenitance.

PAROTIS, pâ-rót-tis, s. 503. A tumour in the glandules behind and about the ears.

PAROXYSM, pâ-rók-síz-m, s. 503. A fit, periodical exacerbation of a disease.

PARRICIDE, pâ-ré-síde, s. 143. One who destroys his father; one who destroys or invades any to whom he owes particular reverence; the murder of a father; murder of one to whom reverence is due.

PARRICIDAL, pâ-ré-sí-dál, } a.

PARRICIDIOUS, pâ-ré-sí-dyús, } Relating to parricide, committing parricide.

PARROT, pâ-rút, s. 166. A party-coloured bird of the species of the hooked bill, remarkable for the exact imitation of the human voice.

To PARRY, pâ-ré, v. n. To put by thrusts, to fence.

To PARSE, pâsse, v. a. 81. To resolve a sentence into the elements or parts of speech.

PARSIMONIOUS, pâ-sé-mó-né-ús, a. Covetous, frugal, sparing.

PARSIMONIOUSLY, pâ-sé-mó-né-ús-lé, ad. Frugally, sparingly.

PARSIMONY, pâ-sé-mún-é, s. 503. 557. Frugality, covetousness, niggardliness.

☞ For the o, see Domestic.

PARSLEY, pârs-lé, } s. Plants.

PARSNIP, pârs-níp, 99. }

PARSON, pâ-rsn, s. 170. The priest of a parish, one that has a parochial charge or cure of souls; a clergyman; it is applied to the teachers of the presbyterians.

☞ The o before n, preceded by k, p, s, or t, is under the same predicament as e; that is, when the accent is not on it, the two consonants unite, and the vowel is suppressed; as beckon, capon, season, mutton, &c. pronounced beck'n, cap'n, seas'n, mutt'n, &c. Parson, therefore, ought to be pronounced with the o suppressed, and not as Mr. Sheridan has marked it.—See Principles, No. 103. 170.

PARSONAGE, pâ-rsn-áje, s. 90. The benefice of a parish.

PART, pârt, s. 81. Something less than the whole, a portion, a quantity taken from a larger quantity; that which in division falls to each; share; side, party; particular office or character; character appropriated in a play; business, duty; relation reciprocal; in good Part, in ill Part, as well done, as ill done; in the plural, qualities, powers, faculties; quarters, regions, districts.

PARTICIPLE, pâr-tê-sîp-pl, s. A word partaking at once the qualities of a noun and verb.

PARTICLE, pâr-tê-kl, s. 405. Any small portion of a greater substance; a word unvaried by inflexion.

PARTICULAR, pâr-tîk'û-lûr, a. 179. Relating to single persons, not general; individual, one distinct from others; noting properties or things peculiar; attentive to things single and distinct; single, not general; odd, having something that eminently distinguishes him from others.

PARTICULAR, pâr-tîk'û-lûr, s. 88. A single instance, a single point; individual, private person; private interest; private character, single self, state of an individual; a minute detail of things singly enumerated; distinct, not general recital.

PARTICULARITY, pâr-tîk-kû-lâr-lê-tê, s. Distinct notice or enumeration, not general assertion; singleness, individuality; petty account, private incident; something peculiar.

To PARTICULARIZE, pâr-tîk'kû-lâr-lîze, v. a. To mention distinctly, to detail, to show minutely.

PARTICULARLY, pâr-tîk'kû-lâr-lê, ad. Distinctly, singly, not universally; in an extraordinary degree.

PARTISAN, pâr-tê-zân, s. 524. A kind of pike or halberd; an adherent to a faction; the commander of a party.

→ All our orthoëpists agree in accenting this word on the first syllable. Mr. Nares says Dr. Johnson has improperly accented this word on the last; but, both in the folio edition of his Dictionary, and the quarto printed since his death, the accent is on the first. There is not the same uniformity in the accentuation of the companion to this word artisan; for though Mr. Nares, Mr. Perry, Dr. Ash, W. Johnston, Buchanan, Bailey, Fenning, and Entick, accent the first syllable, Dr. Johnson, in both editions of his Dictionary, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Barclay, accent the last; and Dr. Kenrick places an accent on both first and last. The same diversity appears in the accentuation of courtesan, a word of exactly the same form; which is accented by Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Mr. Nares, Fenning, and Entick, on the last syllable; and by Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Buchanan, Barclay, Bailey, and Fenning, on the first; and by Mr. Perry both on the first and last. The truth is, these three words are among those which admit of the accent either on the first or last syllable, and this has produced the diversity we find in our Dictionaries, 524. The accent on the first syllable seems the more agreeable to our own analogy, and ought to be preferred, 503

PARTITION, pâr-tîsh'ûn, s. The act of dividing, a state of being divided; division, separation, distinction; part divided from the rest, separate part; that by which different parts are separated; part where separation is made.

PASSION-FLOWER, páh-ún-flö-úr, s. A plant.

PASSION-WEEK, páh-ún-wéek, s. The week immediately preceding Easter, named in commemoration of our Saviour's crucifixion.

PASSIONATE, páh-ún-nát, a. 91. Moved by passion, causing or expressing great commotion of mind; easily moved to anger.

PASSIONATELY, páh-ún-nát-lé, ad. With passion; with desire, love or hatred; with great commotion of mind; angrily.

PASSIONATENESS, páh-ún-nát-nés, s. State of being subject to passion; vehemence of mind.

PASSIVE, pás-sív, a. 158. Receiving impression from some external agent; unresisting, not opposing; suffering, not acting; in grammar, a verb passive is that which signifies passion.

PASSIVELY, pás-sív-lé, ad. With a passive nature.

PASSIVENESS, pás-sív-nés, s. Quality of receiving impression from external agents; passibility, power of suffering.

PASSIVITY, pás-sív-vé-té, s. Passiveness.

PASSOVER, pás-b-vúr, s. A feast instituted among the Jews, in memory of the time when God, smiting the first-born of the Egyptians, passed over the habitations of the Hebrews; the sacrifice killed.

PASSPORT, pás-pört, s. Permission of egress.

PAST, pást, part. a. Properly Passed. Not present, not to come; spent, gone through, undergone.—See Principles, No. 367.

☞ This contraction, in every word but the preposition, is a disgrace to our orthography. It took its rise, in all probability, from words ending in st, with which it was rhymed, as that of Pope:

“Which not alone has slone on ages past,
“But lights the present, and shall warm the last.”

But as we see that possesst, dress, and many others, spelled in this manner to accommodate rhymes to the eye merely, have recovered their true form; there is no reason why this word should not do the same.

PAST, pást, s. Elliptically used for passed time.

PAST, pást, prep. 367. Beyond in time; no longer capable of; beyond, out of reach of; beyond, farther than; above, more than.

To PASTURE, pás-tshúre, v. a. To place in a pasture.

To PASTURE, pás-tshúre, v. n. To graze on the ground.

PASTY, pás-té, s. 515. A pie of crust raised without a dish; a pie.

PAT, pát, a. Fit, convenient, exactly suitable.

PAT, pát, s. A light quick blow, a tap; a small lump of matter heat into shape with the hand.

To PAT, pát, v. a. To strike lightly, to tap.

PATACON, pát-tá-kóon, s. A Spanish coin worth four shillings and eight-pence English.

To PATCH, pátsh, v. a. To cover with a piece sewed on; to decorate the face with small spots of black silk; to mend clumsily, to mend so as that the original strength or beauty is lost; to make up of shreds or different pieces.

PATCH, pátsh, s. 352. A piece sewed on to cover a hole; a piece inserted in mosaick or variegated work; a small spot of black silk put on the face; a small particle; a parcel of land.

PATCHER, pátsh-úr, s. 98. One that patches, a botcher.

PATCHERY, pátsh-úr-é, s. Botchery, bungling work. Out of use.

PATCHWORK, pátsh-würk, s. Work made by sewing small pieces of different colours interchangeably together.

PATE, páte, s. The head.

PATED, pát-téd, a. Having a pate.

PATEFACTION, pát-té-fák-shún, s. Act or state of opening.

PATEN, pát-én, s. 103. A plate. Obsolete.

PATENT, pát-tént, or pát-tént, a. Open to the perusal of all, as letters Patent; something appropriated by letters patent.

☞ This word, when an adjective, is, by Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, and Buchanan, pronounced with the a long, as in paper; but by Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Ash, Mr. Perry, and Entick, short, as in pat. But when the word is a substantive, it is pronounced with the a short by Mr. Nares and all those orthoëpists, except Buchanan. That the adjective should by some be pronounced with the a long, is a remnant of that analogy which ought to prevail in all words of this kind, 544; but the uniformity with which the substantive is pronounced, with the a short, precludes all hope of alteration.

PATENT, pát-tént, s. A writ conferring some exclusive right or privilege.—See the adjective Patent.

PATENTEE, pát-tént-téé, s. One who has a patent.

PATERNAL, pá-tér-nál, a. 88. Fatherly, having the relation of a father; hereditary, received in succession from one's father.

PATERNITY, pá-tér-né-té, s. Fathership, the relation of a father.

↪ 559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fät 81—mé 93, mêt 95—pline 105, pîn 107—nô 162, môte 164,

PATH, pãth, s. 78. 467. Way, road, tract.

PATHETICAL, pã-thét-té-kál, }
PATHETICK, pã-thét-tík, 509. }^a

Affecting the passions, passionate, moving.

PATHETICALLY, pã-thét-té-kál-é, ad. In such a manner as may strike the passions.

PATHETICALNESS, pã-thét-té-kál-nés, s. Quality of being pathetic, quality of moving the passions.

PATHLESS, pãth-lés, a. Untrodden, not marked with paths.

PATHOGNOMONICK, pã-thôg-nô-môn-ík, a. 509. Such signs of a disease as are inseparable, designing the essence or real nature of the disease, not symptomatic.

↪ Mr. Sheridan has suppressed the g in this word as in gnomon, without considering, that when a syllable precedes, the g unites with it, and is to be pronounced. Thus this letter is mute in sign, but pronounced in signify. The same may be observed of resign and resignation, indign, and indignity, &c.

PATHOLOGICAL, pãth-ô-lôd-ik-é-kál, a. Relating to the tokens or discoverable effects of a distemper.

PATHOLOGIST, pã-thôl-lô-jist, s. One who treats of pathology.

PATHOLOGY, pã-thôl-lô-jé, s. 518. That part of medicine which relates to the distempers, with their differences, causes, and effects, incident to the human body.

PATHOPOIEIA, pãth-ô-pô-î-é-á, s. (From the Greek πάθος, passion, and ποιεω, to cause.) The act of moving the passions; the method made use of to move the passions; an address to the passions.

PATHOS, pã-thôs, s. (From the Greek.) Passion, warmth, affection of mind.

PATHWAY, pãth-wá, s. A road, strictly a narrow way to be passed on foot.

PATIBULARY, pã-tib-bu-lá-ré, a. Belonging to the gallows.

PATIENCE, pã-shénse, s. The power of suffering, endurance, the power of expecting long without rage or discontent; the power of supporting injuries without revenge; sufferance, permission; an herb.

PATIENT, pã-shént, a. 463. Having the quality of enduring; calm under pain or affliction; not revengeful against injuries, not easily provoked; not hasty, not viciously eager or impetuous.

PATIENT, pã-shént, s. That which receives impressions from external agents; a person diseased.

PATIENTLY, pã-shént-lé, ad. Without rage under pain or affliction; without vicious impetuosity.

PATINE, pã-tin, s. 140. The cover of a chalice,

PATLY, pãt-lé, ad. Commodiously, fitly.

PATRIARCH, pã-tré-árk, s. 534. 533. One who governs by paternal right, the father and ruler of a family; a bishop superior to archbishops.

PATRIARCHAL, pã-tré-árk-kál, a. Belonging to patriarchs, such as was possessed or enjoyed by patriarchs; belonging to hierarchical patriarchs.

PATRIARCHATE, pã-tré-árk-kát, 91. }
PATRIARCHSHIP, pã-tré-árk-shíp, }^{s.}

A bishoprick superior to archbishopricks.

PATRIARCHY, pã-tré-árk-é, s. 505. Jurisdiction of a patriarch, patriarchate.

PATRICIAN, pã-trish-ün, a. Senatorial, noble, not plebeian.

PATRICIAN, pã-trish-ün, s. A nobleman among the Romans.

PATRIMONIAL, pãt-tré-mô-ne-ál, a. Possessed by inheritance.

PATRIMONY, pãt-tré-mün-né, s. An estate possessed by inheritance.—For the o, see Domestick.

PATRIOT, pã-tré-üt, s. 505. 534. One whose ruling passion is the love of his country.

PATRIOTISM, pã-tré-üt-izim, s. 166. Love of one's country, zeal for one's country.

PATROL, pã-trôle, s. The act of going the rounds in a garrison to observe that orders are kept; those that go the rounds.

↪ All our orthœpists give this word, both as noun and verb, the accent on the last syllable, except Mr. Nares, who wishes to reduce it to the accentual distinction so often observed, 492. Johnson's folio edition has the accent of both words on the first, but the quarto accents both on the last; and this accentuation, it is certain, is the most received in the polite world.

To PATROL, pã-trôle, v. n. To go the rounds in a camp or garrison.

PATRON, pã-trün, s. 166. One who countenances, supports, or protects; a guardian saint; advocate, defender, vindicator; one who has donation of ecclesiastical preferment.

PATRONAGE, pãt-trün-îdje, s. 90. Support, protection; guardianship of saints; donation of a benefice, right of conferring a benefice.

↪ That the first syllable of this word is short, and that of patron long, is owing to the shortening power of the antepenultimate accent, 503.

PATRONAL, pãt-rô-nál, a. Protecting, supporting, guarding, defending.

↪ This word, like matronal, has a diversity of pronunciation in our Dictionaries, which shows the necessity of recurring to principles in order to fix its true sound. Buchanan places the accent on the first syllable; but whether he makes the a long or short cannot be known. Dr. Ash places the accent on the same syllable; and though he makes the a in matronal short, yet he makes the same letter in this word long as in patron. Barclay and Fenning lay the stress upon the first of matronal, and on the second of patronal: Perry and Entick place the accent on the first of both these words, but make the a in matronal long, and the same letter in patronal short. Bailey accents the second syllable of this word.

PATRONESS, pãt-trün-és, s. A female that defends, countenances, or supports; a female guardian saint.

↪ I am well aware of the shortening power of the antepenultimate accent in patronage, patronise, &c. but cannot, as Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Perry, have done, allow it that power in patroness, because the feminine termination ess is as much a substantive of our own as the participial terminations ing or ed, or the plural number, and therefore never ought to alter the accent or quantity of the original word.—See Principles, No. 386. 499.

To PATRONISE, pãt-trô-nîze, v. a. 503. To protect, to support, to defend, to countenance.

PECTORAL, pèk-túr-ál, s. 88. A breast-plate; a medicine proper to strengthen the breast and stomach.

To PECULATE, pèk-kú-lá-te, v. n. To rob or defraud the publick.

↪ It is somewhat singular that this word, as a verb, is not in any of our Dictionaries: nor do the substitutes seem to have been in general use, as Dr. Johnson produces no authorities for them.

PECULATION, pèk-kú-lá-shún, s. Robbery of the publick, theft of publick money.

PECULATOR, pèk-kú-lá-túr, s. 521. Robber of the publick.

PECULIAR, pé-kú-lé-úr, a. 88. Appropriate, belonging to any one with exclusion of others; particular, single.

PEDLAR, pèd-lúr, s. Properly Peddler. One who travels the country with small commodities, contracted from petty dealer.

↪ There is the same impropriety in spelling this word with one d only as there would be in spelling saddler and fidler in the same manner.—For the reasons, see Code.

PEDLERY, pèd-lúr-é, s. 98. Wares sold by pedlars.

PEDDLING, pèd-dál-íng, a. 410. Petty dealing, such as pedlars have.

↪ The spelling of this word might have informed Dr. Johnson of the true spelling of pedlar.

PEDOBAPTISM, pèd-dò-báp-tízm, s. Infant baptism.

↪ I have differed from Mr. Sheridan and several of our orthoepists in making the first syllable of this word short. I am authorised by the shortening power of the secondary accent, 530, notwithstanding the diphthong in the original, which has no more influence in this word than in Cæsarea, æconomick, and a thousand others.

PEDOBAPTIST, pèd-dò-báp-tíst, s. One that holds or practises infant baptism.

To PEEL, péll, v. a. 246. To decorticate, to flay; to plunder. According to analogy this should be written Pill.

PERDITION, pēr-dîsh-ûn, s. Destruction, ruin, death; loss; eternal death.
PERDUE, pēr-dû, ad. Closely, in ambush.
 → Mr. Nares tells us that this word throws the accent back to the fourth syllable from the end, though the derivation demands it otherwise. I am sorry to differ from so judicious an orthoëpist; but cannot conceive that derivation requires the same accent as on durable, since this word is, like many others, considered as a simple, derived from the Latin perdurabilis, which, though not a classical word, is formed in the Latin analogy, and has the same effect on English pronunciation as if it came to us whole; which effect is to place the accent in the anglicised word on that syllable which had a secondary accent in Latin, and that is the first.—See Academy and Incomparable.
 The reason that such a formative as perdurabilis may be admitted as the parent of perdurable, and not interferio that of interference, is, that we form interference from the verb to interfere, rather than from interferio, which is not a Latin word, though, perhaps, in the Latin analogy of formation; but we have no verb to perdure, from which to form perdurable, and therefore allowably follow the Latin analogy of formation, and the English analogy of pronouncing such formatives.—See Interference. Poetical authorities are decidedly in favour of this accentuation:
 "O perdurable shame! let's stab ourselves." Shak
 "..... the vig'rous sweat
 "Doth lend the lively springs their perdurable heat." Drey
 "Why would he, for the momentary trick,
 "Be perdurably fin'd." Shak.
PERDURABLY, pēr-dû-rā-blē, ad. Lastingly.
PERDURATION, pēr-dû-rā-shûn, s. Long continuance.
To PEREGRINATE, pēr-rē-grē-nāte, v. n. To travel, to live in foreign countries.
PEREGRINATION, pēr-rē-grē-nā-shûn, s. Travel, abode in foreign countries.
PEREGRINE, pēr-rē-grîn, a. 150. Foreign, not native, not domestic.
To PEREMPT, pēr-ēmt, v. a. To kill, to crush. A law term.
PEREMPTION, pēr-ēm-shûn, s. Crush, extinction. Law term.
PEREMPTORILY, pēr-rēm-tûr-rē-lē, ad. Absolutely, positively, so as to cut off all farther debate.
PEREMPTORINESS, pēr-rēm-tûr-rē-nēs, s. 412. Positiveness, absolute decision, dogmatism.
PEREMPTORY, pēr-rēm-tûr-ē, or pēr-ēm-tō-rē, a. 512. Dogmatical, absolute, such as destroys all farther expostulation.—For the o, see Domestic.
 → If we consult our orthoëpists, there can scarcely be any two pronunciations more equally balanced than those that are given to this word, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, Mr. Smith, Dr. Ash, W. Johnston, Mr. Scott, and Entick, are for the first; and Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, Bailey, Buchanan, Barclay, Fenning, and Perry, for the last; but notwithstanding the last has these authorities to support it, I am much mistaken if the first has not obtained a complete victory. That there is a strong tendency in words of this kind to draw the accent high, is evident; it is as evident likewise, that those polysyllables, which we derive from the Latin, incline to accent that syllable on which we place a secondary accent in pronouncing the original, see Academy and Disputable; and provided there are no clusters of uncombinable consonants in the latter syllables, there is no reason why this accentuation should be checked. This is the case with the word in question; the p is mute, t is easily pronounced after em, and the whole termination is sufficiently smooth and voluble: but in perfunctory the case is different; the uncombinable consonants nt are not to be pronounced without considerable difficulty, if we place the accent on the first syllable; and therefore this accentuation ought to be avoided as much as in corruptible, which see. The Poets incline to the side I have adopted.

"To-morrow be in readiness to go,
"Excuse it not, for I am peremptory." Shak.

"If I entertaine

"As peremptory a desire, to level with the plaine
"A citie, where they lov'd to live; stand not betwixt my ire
"And what he aims at." Chapman.

Ben Jonson too, in his Grammar, places the accent on the first syllable of this word.

PERENNIAL, pĕr-ĕn-ĕ-ĕ-ĕ-ĕ-ĕ, a. 113. Lasting through the year; perpetual; unceasing.

PERENNITY, pĕr-rĕn-ĕ-ĕ-ĕ-ĕ, s. Equality of lasting through all seasons, perpetuity.

PERFECT, pĕr-fĕkt, a. Complete, consummate, finished, neither defective nor redundant; fully informed, fully skilful; pure, blameless, clear, immaculate.

To PERFECT, pĕr-fĕkt, v. a. To finish, to complete, to consummate, to bring to its true state; to make skilful, to instruct fully.

PERFECTER, pĕr-fĕkt-ĕr, s. 98. One that makes perfect.

PERFECTION, pĕr-fĕk-shŭn, s. The state of being perfect; something that concurs to produce supreme excellence; attribute of God.

To PERFECTIONATE, pĕr-fĕk-shŭn-ĕ-ĕ-ĕ, v. a. To make perfect.

PERFECTIVE, pĕr-fĕk-tĭv, a. 512. Conducting to bring to perfection.

PERFECTIVELY, pĕr-fĕk-tĭv-lĕ, ad. In such a manner as brings to perfection.

PERFECTLY, pĕr-fĕkt-lĕ, ad. In the highest degree of excellence; totally, completely; exactly, accurately.

PERFECTNESS, pĕr-fĕkt-nĕs, s. Completeness; goodness, virtue, a scriptural word; skill.

PERFIDIOUS, pĕr-fĭd-yŭs, a. 294. Treacherous, false to trust, guilty of violated faith.

PERFIDIOUSLY, pĕr-fĭd-yŭs-lĕ, ad. Treacherously, by breach of faith.

PERFIDIOUSNESS, pĕr-fĭd-yŭs-nĕs, s. The quality of being perfidious.

PERFIDY, pĕr-fĕ-dĕ, s. Treachery, want of faith, breach of faith.

To PERFLATE, pĕr-flĕt, v. a. To blow through.

PERFLATION, pĕr-flĕt-shŭn, s. The act of blowing through.

To PERFORATE, pĕr-fŏ-rĕt, v. a. To pierce with a tool, to bore.

PERFORATION, pĕr-fŏ-rĕt-shŭn, s. The act of piercing or boring; hole, place bored.

PERFORATOR, pĕr-fŏ-rĕ-tĕr, s. 521. The instrument of boring.

PERFORCE, pĕr-fŏr-se, ad. By violence, violently.

To PERFORM, pĕr-fŏrm, or pĕr-fŏrm, v. a. To execute, to do, to discharge, to achieve an undertaking.

There is a wanton deviation from rule in the pronunciation of this word and its derivatives, which calls aloud for reformation. Pronouncing the last syllable like form, a seat, is a gross departure from analogy, as will appear by comparing it with the same syllable in reform, conform, inform, deform, transform, &c. This error seems chiefly confined to the stage, where it probably originated. It is not unlikely that some affected actor, to give the word a foreign air, first pronounced it in this manner; though, in justice to the stage, it ought to be observed, that it has less of this affectation than any theatre of elocution in the kingdom.

To PERFORM, pĕr-fŏrm, v. n. To succeed in an attempt.

PERFORMABLE, pĕr-fŏrm-ĕ-ĕ-ĕ-ĕ, a. Practicable, such as may be done.

PERFORMANCE, pĕr-fŏr-mĕns, s. Completion of something designed, execution of something promised; composition, work; action, something done.

PERFORMER, pĕr-fŏrm-ĕr, s. 98. One that performs any thing; it is generally applied to one that makes a publick exhibition of his skill.

To PERFICATE, pĕr-frĕ-kĕt, v. n. To rub over.

PERFUMATORY, pĕr-fĭ-mĕ-tĕr-ĕ, a. 512. That perfumes.

PERFUME, pĕr-fŭm, s. 492. Strong odour of sweetness used to give scents to other things; sweet odour, fragrance.

Penning, Perry, Entick, Dr. Johnson, Buchanan, W. Johnston, and Kenrick, place the accent on the last syllable of this word, either when a substantive or a verb. As a substantive, Scott places the accent either on the first or last, and Sheridan on the first. Mr. Nares has shown at large, that the poets accent the substantive both ways; but the analogy of dissyllable nouns and verbs seems now to have fixed the accent of the substantive on the first, and that of the verb on the last.

To PERFUME, pĕr-fŭm, v. a. To scent, to impregnate with sweet scent.

PERFUMER, pĕr-fŭ-mŭr, s. 98. One whose trade is to sell things made to gratify the scent.

PERFUNCTORILY, pĕr-fŭngk-tŭr-rĕ-lĕ, ad. Carelessly, negligently.

PERFUNCTORY, pĕr-fŭngk-tŭr-ĕ, a. Slight, careless, negligent.

I have differed from Mr. Sheridan and W. Johnston, who accent this word on the first syllable; but have Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Mr. Nares, Barclay, Fenning, Bailley, Buchanan, and Entick, on my side for accenting the second; and this pronunciation, without any authority, would be more eligible than the other, from the difficulty of pronouncing the uncombinable consonants in the last syllables, without the assistance of accent, especially when we consider that the adverb perfunctorily, and the possible abstract noun perfunctoriness, must necessarily have the same accent as the adjective.—See Peremptory, Irrefragable, and Corruptible.

To PERFUSE, pĕr-fŭzĕ, v. a. 437. To tincture, to overspread.

PERIAPS, pĕr-lĕps, ad. Peradventure, it may be.

PERIAPT, pĕr-rĕ-ĕ-ĕ-ĕ, s. Amulet, charm worn as a preservative against diseases or mischief. Obsolete.

PERICULOUS, pĕ-rĭk-kŭ-lŭs, a. 314. Dangerous, hazardous.

PERIGEE, pĕr-ĕ-jĕĕ, }
PERIGEUM, pĕr-ĕ-jĕĕ-ŭm, } s.

That point in the heavens, wherein a planet is said to be in its nearest distance possible from the earth.—See European.

PERIHELUM, pĕr-ĕ-hĕ-lĕ-ŭm, s. That point of a planet's orbit, wherein it is nearest the sun.

PERIL, pĕr-rĭl, s. Danger, hazard, jeopardy; denunciation, danger denounced.

PERILOUS, pĕr-rĭl-ŭs, a. 314. Dangerous, hazardous, full of danger; it is used by way of emphasis, or ludicrous exaggeration of any thing bad; smart, witty. In this last sense out of use.

This word is commonly, but improperly, written with double l, perilous, as it comes from the French perilleux.

PERILOUSLY, pĕr-rĭl-ŭs-lĕ, ad. Dangerously.

PERILOUSNESS, pĕr-rĭl-ŭs-nĕs, s. Dangerousness;

PERIMETER, pĕ-rĭm-mĕ-tĕr, s. 98. The compass

559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fåt 81—mé 93, mêt 95—pline 105, pîn 107—nô 162, môte 164, or sum of all sides which bound any figure of what kind soever, whether rectilinear or mixed.

PERIOD, pèr-è-ùd, s. 166. A circuit; time in which any thing is performed, so as to begin again in the same manner; a stated number of years, a round of time, at the end of which the things comprised within the calculation shall return to the state in which they were at the beginning; the end or conclusion; the state at which any thing terminates; length of duration; a complete sentence from one full stop to another.

PERPOTATION, pĕr-pō-tá-shûn, s. The act of drinking largely.

PERQUISITE, pĕr-kwiz'it, s. 156. Something gained by a place or office over and above the settled wages.

PERQUISITION, pĕr-kwĕ-zish'ûn, s. An accurate inquiry, a thorough search.

PERRY, pĕr-rĕ, s. Cyder made of pears.

To PERSECUTE, pĕr-sĕ-kûte, v. a. To harass with penalties, to pursue with malignity; to pursue with repeated acts of vengeance or enmity; to importune much.

PERSECUTION, pĕr-sĕ-kû-shûn, s. The act or practice of persecuting; the state of being persecuted.

PERSECUTOR, pĕr-sĕ-kû-tûr, s. 98. One who harasses others with continued malignity.

PERSEVERANCE, pĕr-sĕ-vĕ-rânse, s. Persistence in any design or attempt, steadiness in pursuits, constancy in progress.

PERSEVERANT, pĕr-sĕ-vĕ-rânt, a. Persisting, constant.

To PERSEVERE, pĕr-sĕ-vĕ-re', v. n. To persist in an attempt, not to give over, not to quit the design.

↳ Mr. Nares observes, that this word was anciently written persever, and accented on the second syllable.

"..... say thou art mine.

"My love, as it begins, so shall persevere."

All's well, &c. Act IV.

"Persever not, but hear me, mighty kings."

King John, Act II.

"But in her pride she doth persevere still." Spenser.

But that before the time of Milton the spelling and accentuation had been changed.

"Whence heavy persecution shall arise

"Of all who in the worship persevere

"Of spirit and truth." Par. Lost, XII. v. 532.

As this word is written at present, there can be no doubt of its pronunciation; and that it is very properly written so, appears from other words of the same form. Declare, respire, explore, procure, &c. from declaro, respiro, exploro, procuro, &c. and consequently from persevero ought to be formed persevere: not one of our orthoëpists place the accent on the second syllable; yet such is the force of prescription, that the old pronunciation is not entirely rooted out, especially in Ireland, where this pronunciation is still prevalent.

PERSEVERINGLY, pĕr-sĕ-vĕ-re'ing-lĕ, ad. With perseverance.

To PERSIST, pĕr-sist', v. n. 447. To persevere, to continue firm, not to give over.

PERSISTANCE, pĕr-sis'tânse, } s.

PERSISTENCY, pĕr-sis'tĕn-sĕ, } s.
The state of persisting, steadiness, constancy, perseverance in good or bad; obstinacy, contumacy.

PERSISTIVE, pĕr-sis'tiv', a. 157. Steady, not receding from a purpose, persevering.

PERSON, pĕr'sn, s. 170. Individual or particular man or woman; human being; a general loose term for a human being; one's self, not a representative; exterior appearance; man or woman represented in a fictitious dialogue; character; character of office: in Grammar, the quality of the noun that modifies the verb.—See Parson.

PERSONABLE, pĕr'sûn-â-bl, a. Handsome, graceful, of good appearance.

↳ As the o in person is sunk, as in season, treason, &c. this word, being a compound of our own, and person- age coming to us from the French, we generally suppress the o; but as personal, personate, &c. come to us from the Latin, we generally preserve the o. This is the best reason I can give for the slight difference we find in the pronunciation of these words; and if any one is inclined to think we ought to preserve the o distinctly in all of them, except person, and even in this, on solemn occasions, I have not the least objection.

PERSONAGE, pĕr'sûn'idje, s. 90. A considerable person, man or woman of eminence; exterior appearance; air, stature; character assumed; character re-presented.

PERSONAL, pĕr'sûn-âl, a. 88. Belonging to men or women, not to things, not real; affecting individuals or particular people, peculiar, proper to him or her, relating to one's private actions or character; present, not acting by representative; exterior, corporal; in Law, something moveable, something appendant to the person; in Grammar, a personal verb is that which has all the regular modifications of the three persons, opposed to impersonal that has only the third.

PERSONALITY, pĕr-sô-nâl-lĕ-tĕ, s. The existence or individuality of any one.

PERSONALLY, pĕr'sûn-âl-lĕ, ad. In person, in presence, not by representative; with respect to an individual particularly; with regard to numerical existence.

To PERSONATE, pĕr'sûn-âte, v. a. To represent by a fictitious or assumed character, so as to pass for the person represented; to represent by action or appearance, to act; to pretend hypocritically, with the reciprocal pronoun; to counterfeit, to feign; to resemble; to make a representative of, as in a picture, out of use.—See Personable.

PERSONATION, pĕr'sûn-â-shûn, s. Counterfeiting of another person.

PERSONIFICATION, pĕr'sôn-nĕ-lĕ-kâ-shûn, s. Prosopopœia, the change of things to persons.

To PERSONIFY, pĕr'sôn-nĕ-fl, v. a. To change from a thing to a person.

PERSPECTIVE, pĕr-spĕk'tiv, s. A glass through which things are viewed; the science by which things are ranged in a picture, according to their appearance in their real situation; view, vîsto.

↳ This word, as may be seen in Johnson, was generally accented by the poets on the first syllable; but the harshness of this pronunciation arising from the uncombinable consonants in the latter syllables, has prevailed this pronunciation from gaining any ground in prose; and it were much to be wished that the same reason had prevented the initial accentuation of similar words.—See Irrefragable, Corruptible, Acceptable, &c.

PERSPECTIVE, pĕr-spĕk'tiv, a. Relating to the science of vision, optick, optical.

PERSPICACIOUS, pĕr-spĕ-kâ'shûs, a. Quick sighted, sharp of sight. Mentally applied.

To PET, pĕt, v. a. To spoil by too much fondling.

PETAL, pĕtâl, or pĕt'âl, s. Petal is a term in botany, signifying those fine-coloured leaves that compose the flowers of all plants. The leaf of a flower, as distinguished from the leaf of a plant.

↪ I must retract my former pronunciation of the first syllable of this word with Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Berry, and join Dr. Kenrick and Mr. Scott, who make the e long. In all words of this form we ought to incline to this pronunciation, from its being so agreeable to analogy. Let it not be pretended that the e in the Latin petalum is short; so is the a in labellum, and the i in libellus, which yet in the English label and libel, we pronounce long. But however right the long sound of e may be by analogy, I am apprehensive that, as in pedals, the short sound is in more general use.—See Pedals.

PETALOUS, p²é²tá-lús, a. 503. Having petals.

PETAR, p²é²tár, }
PETARD, p²é²tárd, } s.

PHAETON, fá²lé-tón, s. A kind of high open carriage upon four wheels, used for pleasure.

PHALANX, fá²lánk, or fá²lánk, s. A troop of men closely embodied.

→ The second manner of pronouncing this word is more general; but the first is more analogical. If, when we pronounce a Latin or Greek word of two syllables, having a single consonant between two vowels, we always make the first vowel long; it is very natural, when such a word is transplanted whole into our own language, to pronounce it in the same manner. That the quantity of the original has very little to do in this case, may be seen under the word Drama, 544; and yet nothing but an absurd regard to this could have influenced the generality of speakers to pronounce this word with the first vowel short, contrary to the old genuine analogy of our own language, as Dr. Wallis calls it, and contrary to the manner in which we pronounce the word in the original; for though local, favour, and labour, have the first vowel short in the Latin localis, favor, and labor, we pronounce them both in Latin and English according to our own analogy, with the o and a long and open. The same may be observed of words from the Greek. In the word in question, therefore, the authority of Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Dr. Ash, who make the first vowel long, ought to outweigh that of Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry, Entick, and Buchanan, who make it short.

PHANTASM, fán²tázm, }
PHANTASMA, fán²táz-má, } s.

To PHILIP, fîl'îp, v. a. To give a smart stroke with the end of a finger bent against the thumb, and suddenly straightened.

↳ I have not met with this word in any Dictionary I have seen, but have heard it in a thousand conversations where it has been used without scruple. It means a very singular action of the hand which can be expressed by no other word; and certainly deserves a place in the language. If I may hazard a conjecture, it is derived from philippick: the smartness of the stroke being similar to the asperity of the oration.

PHILIP, fîl'îp, s. A smart stroke with the end of the finger bent against the thumb, and suddenly straightened. The word that Mr. Walker has so frequently heard is Fillip, which see.

PHILIPPICK, fîl'îp'pîk, s. Any invective declamation.

↳ Invective orations are so called from those of Demosthenes, pronounced against Philip king of Macedon, and which abounded with the sharpest invectives.

PHILOLOGER, fê lîl'îd jûr, s. 131. One whose chief study is language, a grammarian, a critic.

PHILOGICAL, fîl'î dîd'jê-kâl, a. Critical, grammatical.

PHILOLOGY, fê lîl'îd jê, s. 131. 518. Criticism, grammatical learning.

PHILOMEL, fîl'îb' mêt, } s. The nightingale.

PHILOMELA, fîl'îb' mêt'î, } s. The nightingale.

PHILOMOT, fîl'îb' môt, a. Coloured like a dead leaf.

PHILOSOPHER, fê lîs'îd'fûr, s. 131. A man deep in knowledge, either moral or natural.

PHILOSOPHER'S STONE, fê lîs'îd'fûr-stônê, s. A stone dreamed of by alchemists, which, by its touch, converts base metals into gold.

PHILOSOPHICK, fîl'îb' zôf'fîk, 425. 509. } a.

Belonging to philosophy, suitable to a philosopher; skilful in philosophy; frugal, abstemious.

PHILOSOPHICALLY, fîl'îb' zôf'fê-kâl-ê, ad.

In a philosophical manner, rationally, wisely.

↳ Mr. Sheridan seems very properly to have marked the s in this and the two preceding words, as pronounced like z.—For the reasons, see Principles, No. 425. 435.

PHILOSOPHISM, fê lîs'îd'fîzm, s. Visionary or unfounded philosophy.

↳ This word has been brought into use since the French revolution, and is generally meant to ridicule the absurd systems of philosophy that revolution has been productive of. In this sense it has been used by one of the best writers of our own country, Dr. Barrow, on Education, where he says, "An education, without prejudices, is, indeed, a notion dictated by the true spirit of philosophism, and expressed in its own jargon; for it is in practice an impossibility, and in terms little less than a contradiction," vol. 1. p. 34.

To PHILOSOPHIZE, fê lîs'îd'fîze, v. n. To play the philosopher, to reason like a philosopher.

PHILOSOPHY, fê lîs'îd'fê, s. Knowledge natural or moral; hypothesis or system upon which natural effects are explained; reasoning, argumentation; the course of sciences read in the schools.

PHILTRE, fîl'tûr, s. 98. Something to cause love.

↳ This word ought rather to be written philtre.—See Principles, No. 416.

To PHILTER, fîl'tûr, v. a. To charm to love.

PHIZ, fîz, s. The face. A low word.

PHLEBOTOMIST, fê bôt'tô-mîst, s. One that opens a vein, a blood-letting.

To PHLEBOTOMIZE, fê bôt'tô-mîze, v. a. To let blood.

PHLEBOTOMY, fê bôt'tô-mê, s. Blood-letting, the art or practice of opening a vein for medical intentions.

PHEGM, fêgm, s. 389. The watery humour of the body; the tough viscid matter discharged by coughing; water.

PHEGMAGOGUE, fêgm'â-gôg, s. 389. A purge of the milder sort, supposed to evacuate phlegm, and leave the other humours.—See Pathognomonick.

PHEGMATICK, fêgm'â-tîk, a. 510. Abounding in phlegm; generating phlegm; watery; dull, cold, frigid.

PHEGMON, fêgm'môn, s. 166. An inflammation, a burning tumour.

PHEGMONOUS, fêgm'mô-nûs, a. Inflammatory, burning.

PHEME, fême, s. An instrument which is placed on the vein, and driven into it with a blow.

PHLOGISTIC, fîb'jîs'tîk, a. Having phlogiston.

PHLOGISTON, fîb'jîs'tôn, or fîb'gîs'tôn, s. 560. A chymical liquor extremely inflammable; the inflammable part of any body.

↳ Professors of every art think they add to its dignity, not only by deriving the terms of it from the Greek, but by pronouncing those terms contrary to the analogy of our own language. For this reason our pronunciation becomes full of anomalies, and the professors of an art speak one language, and the rest of the world another. Those, therefore, who are not chymists, ought, in my opinion, to enter their protest against the irregular sound of the g in this and similar words. Pronouncing the g soft, would only hurt the pride of the professor; but pronouncing it hard, would hurt the genius of the language.—See Heterogeneous.

PHOSPHOR, fôs'fûr, 166. } s.

PHOSPHORUS, fôs'fô-rûs, } s. The morning star; a chymical substance which exposed to the air, takes fire.

PHRASE, frâze, s. An idiom, a mode of speech peculiar to a language; an expression, a mode of speech.

To PHRASE, frâze, v. a. To style, to call, to term.

PHRASEOLOGY, frâ-zê-ôl'îb'jê, s. 518. Style, diction; a phrase book.

PHRENETICK, frê-nê'tîk, a. Mad, inflamed in the brain, frantick.

↳ This word, as well as phrenitis, is pronounced by Mr. Sheridan with the accent on the first syllable; in which, though he is contrary to analogy, he is consistent. But Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Barclay, pronounce phrenetic with the accent on the first syllable, and phrenitis with the accent on the second. That the penultimate accent is the true pronunciation in both can scarcely be doubted, if we consult analogy, 509; and that it is most in use, may appear from the additional suffrages of Dr. Ash, Mr. Nares, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, W. Johnston, Entick, Bailey, and Fenning.

PHRENETIS, frê-nî'tîs, s. 503. Madness; inflammation of the brain.

PHRENSY, frê'nî-zê, s. Madness, frantickness.

PITHICAL, tîz'zê-kâl, a. 413. Wasting.

PITHICK, tîz'zîk, 413. } s. A consumption.

PHTHISIS, thî'sîs, 544. } s. A consumption.

PHYLACTERY, fê-lâk'têr-ê, s. A bandage on which was inscribed some memorable sentence.

PHYSICAL, fîz'zê-kâl, a. Relating to nature or to natural philosophy, not moral; pertaining to the science of healing; medicinal, helpful to health; resembling physick.

PHYSICALLY, fîz'zê-kâl-ê, ad. According to nature, by natural operation, not morally.

PHYSICIAN, fê-zîsh'ân, s. One who professes the art of healing.

PHYSICK, fîz'zîk, s. The science of healing; medicines, remedies; in common phrase, a purge.

To PHYSICK, fîz'zîk, v. a. To purge, to treat with physick, to cure.

PHYSICOTHOLOGY, fîz'zê-kô-thê-ôl'îb'jê, s. Divinity enforced or illustrated by natural philosophy.

PHYSIOGNOMER, fîzh-ê-ôgm'îb'jê, or fîz'zê-ê-ôgm'îb'jê, } s.

PHYSIOGNOMIST, fîzh-ê-ôgm'îb'jê, 518. } s. One who judges of the temper or future fortune by the features of the face.

↳ For the propriety of pronouncing the s in these words like zh, we need only appeal to analogy. S, before a diphthong beginning with i, and having the accent before it, either primary or secondary, always goes into zh, as may be seen, Principles, No. 451. The secondary accent on the first syllable of these words gives a feebleness to the second, which occasions the aspiration of s as much as in evason, adhesion, &c. where the s is preceded by the primary accent. It must, however, be acknowledged, that this is far from being the most general pronunciation.—See Ecclesiastick.

PHYSIOGNOMY, fizh-ê-ôg-ê-nô-mê, s. The art of discovering the temper, and foreknowing the fortune by the features of the face; the face, the cast of the look.

↳ There is a prevailing mispronunciation of this word, by leaving out the g, as if the word were French. If this arises from ignorance of the common rules of spelling, it may be observed, that g is always pronounced before n when it is not in the same syllable; as, signify, indignity, &c. but if affectation be the cause of this error, Dr. Young's Love of Fame will be the best cure for it.—See Pathognomick.

To PILL, pîl, v. a. For Peel, to strip off the bark.

To PILL, pîl, v. n. To come off in flakes or scoriae.

↪ This word, says Dr. Johnson, should be written peel. To strip off the bark or rind of any thing is universally so pronounced; but when it is written pill, it is impossible to pronounce it peel, as Mr. Sheridan has done, without making the eye contradict the ear too palpably. I am of opinion that the pronunciation ought to conform to the orthography.—See Bowl.

PILLAGE, pîl'lidje, s. 90. Plunder, something got by plundering or pilling; the act of plundering.

PITY, pî't'çé, s. Compassion, sympathy with misery, tenderness for pain or uneasiness; a ground of pity, a subject of pity or of grief.

To PITY, pî't'çé, v. a. To compassionate misery, to regard with tenderness on account of unhappiness.

To PITY, pî't'çé, v. n. To be compassionate.

PIVOT, pîv'vüt, s. A pin on which any thing turns.

PIX, pîks, s. A little chest or box in which the consecrated Host is kept in Roman catholic countries.

PLACABLE, plâ'kâ-bl, a. 405. Willing or possible to be appeas'd.

↳ Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, W. Johnston, and Buchanan, make the radical a in this word and its derivatives long, as l have done; but Dr. Kenrick and Mr. Perry make it short. Mr. Scott marks it both ways, but seems to give the short sound the preference, by placing it first. This, from the shortening power of the antepenultimate accent, it must be confessed, is the most analogical, 535; but this word and its companion, capable, seem immovably fixed in the long sound of the antepenultimate, though the o in the same situation in docible and indocible evidently inclines to the short sound. —See Incapable and Indocil.

PLACABILITY, plâ'kâ-bîl'çé-té, }
PLACABLENESS, plâ'kâ-bl'nés, } s.

Willingness to be appeas'd, possibility to be appeas'd.

PLACARD, plâk-ârd', }
PLACART, plâk-ârt', } s.

An edict, a declaration, a manifesto.

↳ Bailey places the accent on the first syllable of placard, and Fenning on the first of both these words; all our other orthoëpists place the accent as l have done.

PLACE, plâse, s. Particular portion of space; locality, local relation; local existence; space in general; a seat, residence, mansion; passage in writing; state of being, validity; rank, order of priority; office, public character or employment; room, way; ground, room.

To PLACE, plâse, v. a. To put in any place, rank, or condition; to fix, to settle, to establish.

PLACER, plâ'sâr, s. 98. One that places.

PLACID, plâs'sîd, a. Gentle, quiet; soft, mild.

PLACIDLY, plâs'sîd-lé, ad. Mildly, gently.

PLACIT, plâs'çit, s. Decree, determination.

PLACKET, or PLAQUET, plâk'kît, s. 99.

A petticoat.

PLAGIARISM, plâ'çâ-rîz'm, s. Theft, literary adoption of the thoughts or works of another.

PLAGIARY, plâ'çâ-ré, s. A theft in literature, one who steals the thoughts or writings of another; the crime of literary theft.

↳ Mr. Elphinston and some respectable speakers pronounce this word with the first vowel short, as if written plâç-jary; but Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, Mr. Buchanan, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, and Entick, mark it with the a long, as if written play-jary; and to know which is the true pronunciation, we need only recur to analogy, which tells us that every vowel, except i, having the accent, and being followed by a diphthong, is long.—See Principles No. 505. 507.

PLAGUE, plâç, s. 337. Pestilence, a disease eminently contagious and destructive; state of misery; any thing troublesome or vexatious.

To PLAGUE, plâç, v. a. To infect with pestilence; to trouble, to tease, to vex, to harass, to torment, to afflict.

PLAINT, plânt, s. Lamentation, complaint, lament, expression of sorrow.

PLAINTFUL, plânt'fûl, a. Complaining, audibly sorrowful.

PLAINTIFF, plâne'tîf, s. He that commences a suit in law against another, opposed to the defendant.

↳ This word was universally, till of late years, pronounced with the first syllable like plan, as appears by its being adopted by Mr. Scott, Mr. Elphinston,

Mr. Perry, W. Johnston, and Dr. Kenrick; but a laudable desire of reforming the language has restored the diphthong to its true sound; and the first syllable of this word, like plane, is now the current pronunciation of all our courts of justice. Mr. Sheridan and Entick agree in this pronunciation.

PLAINTIFF, plâne'tîf, a. Complaining. A word not in use, being now written Plaintive.

PLAINITIVE, plâne'tîv, a. Complaining, lamenting, expressive of sorrow.

PLAINWORK, plâne'wûrk, s. Needlework as distinguished from embroidery.

PLAIT, plâte, s. 202. A fold, a double.

To PLAIT, plâte, v. a. To fold, to double; to weave, to braid.

↳ There is a corrupt pronunciation of this word, as if written plait, which must be carefully avoided.

PLAITER, plâte'ûr, s. 98. One that plaits

PLANOCONICAL, plâ-nô-kôn'nê-kâl, a. Level on one side, and conical on the other.

PLANOCONVEX, plâ-nô-kôn'vêks, a. Flat on the one side, and convex on the other.

PLANT, plânt, s. Any thing produced from seed, any vegetable production; a sapling.

↳ There is a coarse pronunciation of this word, chiefly among the vulgar, which rhymes it with ant. This pronunciation seems a remnant of that broad sound which was probably given to the a before two consonants in all words, but which has been gradually wearing away, and which is now, except in a few words, become a mark of vulgarity.—See Principles, No. 79.

To PLANT, plânt, v. a. To put into the ground in order to grow, to set, to generate; to place, to fix; to settle, to establish, as, to plant a colony; to fill or adorn with something planted, as he planted the garden or the country; to direct properly, as, to plant a cannon.

PLEIADS, plê-yâdz, } s. A northern constellation.

PLEIADES, plê-yâ-dêz, }

I have preferred those orthoëpists who mark these words as I have done, to Mr. Sheridan, who makes the first syllable like the verb to ply. Dr. Kenrick, Scott, and Perry, the only orthoëpists from whom we can know the sound of the diphthong ei, give it as I have done; and Johnson, by placing the accent after the e, seems to have done the same: but the sound we invariably give to these vowels in plebeian, is a sufficient proof of English analogy; and that pronouncing them like eye, is an affectation of adhering to the Greek, from which pleiades is derived.—See Key to the Classical Pronunciation of Greek and Latin Proper Names, under the word.

PLENARILY, plên-â-rê-lê, ad. Fully, completely.

PLENARY, plên-â-rê, or plên-â-rê, a. Full, complete.

Some very respectable speakers make the vowel e, in the first syllable of this word, long; but analogy and the best usage seem to shorten the e, as they do the a, in granary. Mr. Nares, W. Johnston, Buchanan, and Entick, adopt the second pronunciation; and Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Perry, the first: nor do I see any reason that the e should not be short in this word as well as in plenitude, in which all our orthoëpists, except Buchanan, pronounce the e as in plenty.

PLENARINESS, plên-â-rê-nês, s. Fulness, completeness.

PLENILUNARY, plên-nê-lû-nâ-rê, a. Relating to the full moon.

PLENIPOTENCE, plê-nîp'-pô-tênsê, s. Fulness of power.

PLENIPOTENT, plê-nîp'-pô-tênt, a. Invested with full power.

PLENITUDE, plên-nê-tûde, s. Fulness, the contrary to vacuity; repletion, animal fulness, plethora; exuberance, abundance, completeness.

PLENTEOUS, plên-tshê-ûs, a. 263. Copious, exuberant, abundant; fruitful, fertile.

PLENTEOUSLY, plên-tshê-ûs-lê, ad. Copiously, abundantly, exuberantly.

PLENTEOUSNESS, plên-tshê-ûs-nês, s. Abundance, fertility.

PLENTIFUL, plên-tê-fûl, a. Copious, abundant, exuberant, fruitful.

PLENTIFULLY, plên-tê-fûl-lê, ad. Copiously, abundantly.

PLENTIFULNESS, plên-tê-fûl-nês, s. The state of being plentiful, abundance, fertility.

PLENTY, plên-tê, s. Abundance, such a quantity as is more than enough; fruitfulness, exuberance; it is used, I think, barbarously for plentiful; a state in which enough is had and enjoyed.

PLEONASM, plê-b-nâzm, s. A figure of rhetoric, by which more words are used than are necessary.

PLETHORA, plêth'-ô-râ, s. 462. The state in which the vessels are fuller of humours than is agreeable to a natural state of health.

All our orthoëpists, except a Dictionary of Terms in Medicine, place the accent on the first syllable of this word, notwithstanding the Greek and Latin o are long. This, probably, arose from the anglicised word plethora, where the accent is very properly antepenultimate.—See Principles, No. 503.

PLETHORETICK, plêth-ô-rê-tîk, } a.

PLETHORICK, plê-thôr-tîk, 509. } Having a full habit.

PLETHORY, plêth-ô-rê, s. 503. Fulness of habit.

→ 559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fât 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pine 105, pîn 107—nô 162, môve 164,

→ For the same reason that I have placed the accent on the first syllable of dimissory, I have placed it on the first syllable of this word; our language seems to prefer deriving it from the Latin possessorius, to forming it from our own word possess; and when this is the case, the accent is generally on the first syllable, because the secondary accent was on that syllable in the English pronunciation of the Latin word, see Academy. Dr. Johnson and Mr. Sheridan give this word the same accentuation as I have done; but most of our other orthoëpists accent the second syllable.

To PREDICATE, pré-dé-káte, v. a. To affirm any thing of another thing.

PREDICATE, pré-dé-kát, s. 91. That which is affirmed of the subject. Thus, in the sentence, "Man is a rational animal." Man is the subject, and a rational animal is the predicate. In this sentence also, "The Wages of sin is Death." Death is the subject, and the wages of sin is the predicate, where it may likewise be observed, that it is the subject of the proposition which governs the verb, and forms what is called the Nominative case.

PREDICATION, pré-dé-ká'shûn, s. Affirmation concerning any thing.

To PREDICT, pré-dikt', v. a. To foretell, to fore-show.

PREDICTION, pré-dik'shûn, s. Prophecy, declaration of something future.

PREDICTOR, pré-dik'túr, s. Foreteller.

PREDIGESTION, pré-dé-jés'tshûn, s. Digestion too soon performed.

PREDILECTION, pré-dé-lék'shûn, s. Preference, partiality, prepossession in favour of any thing.

☞ It is probable that this word was not in use when Dr. Johnson wrote his Dictionary, or he would have inserted it; perhaps it was first used by the author of the Letters signed Junius; but the readiness with which it has since been adopted by the most respectable writers, is a sufficient proof of its propriety and utility. Scott, Entick, and Mason, are the only orthoëpists who have inserted this word.

To PREDISPOSE, pré-dis-póze', v. a. To adapt previously to any certain purpose.

PREDISPOSITION, pré-dis-pó-zish'ûn, s. Previous adaptation to any certain purpose.

PREDOMINANCE, pré-dóm'mé-nánsé, } s.

PREFECT, præ-fèkt, s. A governor.

PREFECTURE, præ-fèk-tûre, s. Command, office of government.

Though I have agreed with all our orthoëpists in making the first syllable of perfect long, I cannot follow them so implicitly in the accent and quantity of this word. All but Mr. Sheridan, W. Johnston, and Mr. Perry, place the accent on the second syllable, and the two first of these writers make the first syllable long, as in perfect. Mr. Perry alone has, in my opinion, given this word its true pronunciation, by placing the accent on the first syllable, and making that syllable short. This is agreeable to that general tendency of our language to an antepenultimate accentuation, and a short quantity on every vowel but u.—See Principles, No. 533. 555.

To PREFER, præ-fèr, v. a. To regard more than another; to advance to exalt, to raise; to offer solemnly, to propose publicly, to exhibit.

Mr. Elphinston is the only orthoëpist who gives the short sound to i in this word. Perhaps no one understands the analogies of our language better; but in this and several other words he overturns the very foundation of language, which is general custom. I am well acquainted with the shortening power of the antepenultimate accent, 535; and if custom were wavering, this ought to decide; but in this word, and primary, custom is uniform, and precludes all appeal to analogy.

→ The first pronunciation of this word is adopted by Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, and Entick; and the last by Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Elphinston, and Mr. Scott. Mr. Elphinston is in this word consistent with his pronunciation of primacy; but my ear and observation greatly fall me, if the first mode of pronouncing this word is not the most agreeable to polite as well as common usage. It seems to retain the sound of its primitive prinate, as piracy does of pirate; which word piracy Mr. Elphinston, in opposition to all our orthoëpists, pronounces with the i short.

PRIVADO, prîvâ-dô, s. A secret friend. Not used. See Lumbago.

PRIVATIVE, prîv'vâ-tîv, a. 133. Causing privation of any thing; consisting in the absence of something; not positive.

→ Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, and Entick, make the first syllable of this word short, as I have done; and Mr. Perry and Buchanan make it long. In defence of the first pronunciation it may be observed, that this word is not like primacy and primary; the first of which is a formative of our own; and the second, derived from the Latin primarius, which, in our pronunciation of the Latin, does not shorten the i in the first syllable as privatus does, see Academy and Incomparable, and therefore these words are no rule for the pronunciation of this; which, besides the general tendency of the penultimate accent to shorten every vowel it falls on but u, ë, ë, seems to have another claim to the short vowel from its termination; thus édnâive, donâive, prîmîive, derîvâive, &c. all plead for the short sound.

PRIVATIVE, prîv'vâ-tîv, s. 157. That of which the essence is the absence of something, as silence is only the absence of sound.

PRIVATIVELY, prîv'vâ-tîv-lê, ad. By the absence of something necessary to be present, negatively.

PROCESS, prô'sês, s. 533. Tendency, progressive course; regular and gradual progress; methodical management of any thing; course of law.

↪ Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, and Mr. Ferry, place the accent on the first syllable of this word; and those who give the quantity of the vowels make it short: Buchanan alone, though he places the accent on the first syllable, makes it long.

Mr. Nares, suspects the accentuation of this word on the second syllable to be the most ancient, though Shakespeare so frequently places the accent on the first.

"Tell her the process of Antonio's end." Merchant of Venice

"In brief, to set the needless process by." Measure for Measure

"In process of the seasons I have secu." Shakespeare's Sonnets

But Milton accents the second syllable:

"Cannot without process of speech be told." Par Lost, vii. 178

"..... which might rise

"By policy and long process of time." Ib. ii. 297.

There is a phrase, as Mr. Nares observes, in process of time, when we oftener hear the accent on the second syllable of this word than the first. This is undoubtedly a proof of the justness of his observation respecting the antiquity of this pronunciation; but as it is now antiquated in other phrases, it ought not to be used in this.

PROLOCUTOR, prò-lò-kû-tûr, s. 503. The foreman, the speaker of a convocation.

↪ In compliance with so many authorities I placed the accent on the antepenultimate syllable of interlocutor, and nearly the same authorities oblige me to place the accent on the penultimate of this word; for so Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, Barclay, Fenning, and Bailey, accent it. But surely these two words ought not to be differently accented; and if my opinion had any weight, I would accent them both on the penultimate, as they may be considered exactly like words ending in ator, and ought to be accented in the same manner. Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Scott are very singular in placing the accent on the first syllable.—See Interlocutor.

PRONOUN, prô-nôn, s. 313. A word used instead of a noun or name.

To PRONOUNCE, prô-nôunse, v. a. 313. To speak, to utter; to utter solemnly, to utter confidently; to form or articulate by the organs of speech; to utter rhetorically.

To PRONOUNCE, prô-nôunse, v. n. To speak with confidence or authority.

PRONOUNCER, prô-nôun-sûr, s. 98. One who pronounces.

PRONUNCIATION, prô-nûn-shê-â'shûn, s. Act or mode of utterance.

There are few words more frequently mispronounced than this. A mere English scholar, who considers the verb to pronounce as the root of it, cannot easily conceive why the o is thrown out of the second syllable; and therefore, to correct the mistake, sounds the word as if written pronunciation. Those who are sufficiently learned to escape this error, by understanding that the word comes to us either from the Latin pronunciatio, or the French prononciation, are very apt to fall into another, by sinking the first aspiration, and pronouncing the third syllable like the noun sea. But these speakers ought to take notice, that, throughout the whole language, e, s, and t, preceded by the accent, either primary or secondary, and followed by ea, ia, to, or any similar diphthong, always become aspirated, and are pronounced as if written she. Thus the very same reasons that oblige us to pronounce partiality, propitiation, especially, &c. as if written parsheality, propisheashun, esheshally, &c. oblige us to pronounce pronunciation as if written pronunsheshun. See Principles, No. 357, 450, 461, and the word Eccelesiastick.

But though Mr. Sheridan avoids the vulgar error of sinking the aspiration, in my opinion he falls into one fully as exceptionable; which is, that of pronouncing the word in four syllables, as if written pro-nun-sha-shun. I am grossly mistaken if correct speakers do not always pronounce this and similar words in the manner I have marked them; and, indeed, Mr. Sheridan himself seems dubious with respect to some of them; for though he pronounces glaciate, gluciation, association, &c. glâ-shate, glâ-sha-shun, as-so-sha-shun, &c. yet he spells conglaciate, conglaciation, and association, -con-glâ-syate, con-glâ-syashun, con-so-sya-shun. See Principles, No. 542, 543.

☞ The first pronunciation of this word is adopted by Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Smith, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, Barclay, Bailey, and Fenning; and the second by Mr. Nares, Dr. Ash, Dr. Johnson, and Entick. As this substantive was derived from the verb, it had formerly the accent of the verb: and that this accent was the most prevailing, appears from the majority of authorities in its favour. But the respectable authorities for the second pronunciation, and the pretence of distinguishing it from the verb, may very probably establish it, to the detriment of the sound of the language, without any advantage to its signification. See Bowl.

Mr. Elphinston, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Smith, Mr. Perry, and Buchanan, are for the first pronunciation of this word; and Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, and Barclay, for the second. When authorities are so nicely balanced, analogy ought to decide; and that is clearly for the first pronunciation. See Principles, No. 323.

PROWESS, prô-és, or prò-és, s. Bravery valour, military gallantry.

Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, and Perry, adopt the first sound of this word; and Mr. Nares only the second: here too analogy must decide for the first.—See Principles, No. 323.

To PROWL, prôul, or pròle, v. n. To wander for prey, to prey, to plunder.

This word, among many others composed of the diphthong ow, is subject to a double pronunciation; the one rhyming with cowl, and the other with stroll. That the former is more agreeable to analogy may be seen from the more numerous instances of this sound of the ow than of the other; that the latter pronunciation, however, was very prevalent, may be gathered from the mode of spelling this word in Philip's Pasturals, edit. 1748. Tonson and Draper.

"I, only with the prowling wolf, constrain'd
All night to wake: with hunger he is paid,
And I with lore. His hunger he may tame;
"But who can quench, O cruel love! thy flame."

The authorities for the first pronunciation are Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Smith, Mr. Scott, Buchanan, and W. Johnston; and for the second, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Perry: and analogy must decide as in the two foregoing words.—See Principles, No. 325.

PUEFELLOW, pû'fêl-lô, s. A partner. A cant word.

PUERILE, pû'ê-rîl, a. 140. 145. Childish, boyish: PUERILITY, pû'ê-rîl-ê-tê, s. Childishness, boyishness.

PUET, pû'êt, s. 99. A kind of water-fowl.

PUFF, pûf, s. A quick blast with the mouth; a small blast of wind; a fungus; any thing light and porous, as Puff paste; something to sprinkle powder on the hair.

To PUFF, pûf, v. n. To swell the cheeks with wind; to blow with a quick blast; to blow with scornfulness; to breathe thick and hard; to do or move with hurry, tumult, or tumultuous agitation; to swell with the wind.

To PUFF, pûf; v. a. To swell as with wind; to drive or agitate with blasts of wind; to drive with a blast of breath scornfully; to swell or blow up with praise; to swell or elate with pride.

PUISNE, pû'nê, a. 458. Young, younger, later in time; petty, inconsiderable, small.

PUISSANCE, pû'is-sânse, or pû'is'sânse, s. Power, strength, force.

☞ The best way to judge of the pronunciation of this and the following word will be to show the authorities for each: and as the negative of these words, impuissance, is governed by its positive, it may not be improper to join it to the list.

Puis'sance, { Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash,
Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Perry, Fenning, Barclay, Bailey, Buchanan, and Entick.

Pu'issance, { Mr. Sheridan.

Puis'sant, { Dr. Johnson, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash,
Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, Buchanan,
W. Johnston, Barclay, Bailey, Fenning, and Entick.

Pu'issant, { Mr. Sheridan.

Impu'issance, { Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Barclay, Bailey, and Fenning.

Impu'issance, { Mr. Sheridan.

Nothing can be more decisive than the authorities for the penultimate accent on these words, and this induced me to alter my former accentuation on the first syllable: but maturer consideration has convinced me that this is most conformable to the best as well as the most ancient usage; That double consonants in the middle do not always attract the accent.—See Principles, No. 503, b.

This word, Dr. Johnson says, seems to have been pronounced with only two syllables. "It was undeniably so," says Mr. Mason, "in Shakespeare and subsequent writers: but if Johnson had taken the pains of looking into Spenser's Fairy Queen, he might have found, very near the beginning of the first canto, that the word was a trisyllable:

"And ever as he rode his heart did earne,
 "To prove his puissance in battle brave
 "Upon his foe."

I am more and more convinced that the true pronunciation of this word is in three syllables, with the accent on the first. Thus in the first chorus of Shakespeare's Henry the Fifth,

"Into a thousand parts divide one man,
 "And make imaginary puissance."

And again in the third chorus:

"And leave your England as dead midnight still,
 "Guarded with grandsires, babies, and old women,
 "Or past, or not arriv'd at pith and puissance."

PUISSANT, pû²-îs-sânt, a. Powerful, strong, forcible.

PUISSANTLY, pû²-îs-sânt-lê, ad. Powerfully, forcibly.

To PULLULATE, pûl²-lû-lâte, v. n. 177. To germinate, to bud.

PULMONARY, pûl²-mô-nâr-ê, 177. } a.

PULMONICK, pûl²-môn-nîk, 509. } a.

Belonging to the lungs.
PULP, pûlp, s. Any soft mass; the soft part of fruit.

↪ All our orthœpists, except Mr. Elphinston, give the u in this word the same sound as in dull, and not as in pull, as he has done.

PULPIT, pûl²-pît, s. 174. A place raised on high, where a speaker stands; the higher desk in the church, where the sermon is pronounced.

↪ Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Nares, Dr. Kenrick, and W. Johnston, pronounce the u in this word as I have done. Mr. Perry alone gives it the sound of u in dull.

PULPOUS, pûlp²-ûs, a. Soft.

PULPOUSNESS, pûlp²-ûs-nês, s. The quality of being pulposus.

PULPY, pûlp²-ê, a. Soft, pappy.

To PULVIL, pûl²-vîl, v. a. To sprinkle with perfumes in powder.

PUMICE, pû²-nîs, or pûm²-mîs, s. A slag or cinder of some fossil.

↪ This word ought to be pronounced peumis. In nothing is our language more regular than in preserving the u open when the accent is on it, and followed by a single consonant; and therefore Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Buchanan, who give it this sound, ought rather to be followed than Mr. Elphinston, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Perry, and Entick, who adopt the short u.—See Luculent.

PUMMEL, pûm²-mîl, s. 99.—See Pommel.

PUMP, pûmp, s. An engine by which water is drawn up from wells; its operation is performed by the pressure of the air; a shoe with a thin sole and low heel.

⇒ The common pronunciation of the capital is the first sound given to this word; but in Ireland, and the different counties of England, it is generally pronounced regularly so as to rhyme with hut, nut, &c. W. Johnston has adopted this sound, and Mr. Perry gives it both ways, but seems to prefer the regular sound. Mr. Nares is decidedly in favour of this sound; and as this word, when a noun, is always so pronounced, it seems a needless departure from rule, and embarrassing the language, to have the same word differently pronounced. This is an inconvenience to which, perhaps, all languages are subject; but it ought in all languages to be avoided as much as possible. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Smith, adopt the first sound.—See Boul.

PYGARG, pí'gárg, s. A bird.

PYGMEAN, pí'g-mé'an, a. Belonging to a pygmy.

☞ This word has the accent on the penultimate for the same reason as Epicurean. It is derived from Pigmæi, Pigmies: and its adjective, if it had one, must have had the diphthong in it, which would necessarily fix the accent on that syllable.—See European.

"They less than smallest dwarfs in narrow room

"Through numberless, like that pygmean race

"Beyond the Indian mount." Milton.

PYGMY, pí'g-mé, s. A dwarf, one of a nation fabled to be only three spans high, and after long wars to have been destroyed by cranes.

PYRE, pí're, s. A pile to be burnt.

PYRITES, pé-rít'éz, or pí'r'él-tíz, s. 187. Firestone.

☞ This word is accented on the second syllable by Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Barclay, Bailey, and Fenning; and on the first by Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, Mr. Pery, and Entick. Pyrites is the analogical pronunciation; and for as the word is derived from the Greek πυρρός and the Latin pyrites, (both with the accent on the penultimate, and preserving the form of their originals) it ought to have the accent on the same syllable. See Principles, No. 503.

PYROMANCY, pí'r-ó-mán-sé, s. 519. Divination by fire.

PYROTECHNICAL, pí'r-ó-ték'né-kál, a. 530.

☞ Square, having four right angles.

QUADRANT, kwá-dránt, s. 85. The fourth part, the quarter; the quarter of a circle; an instrument with which altitudes are taken.

☞ It has been observed in the Principles, No. 85, 86, &c. that w, by articulating the a, gives it the deep broad sound equivalent to the diphthong aw; and that w, preceded by q, has exactly the same effect 414. This is evident from the sound of a in this and similar words, which, till lately, was always pronounced broad. Some innovators have attempted to give the a in this word its slender sound; but the publick ear seems in opposition to it, nor ought it to be admitted. The broad sound is the genuine English pronunciation, as appears in every word where it is succeeded by r. As this consonant, when final, or followed by another consonant, gives every a that precedes it the Italian sound heard in father; so, when these letters are preceded by q, or w, the a falls into the broad sound heard in water. Thus, as we hear bar, dart, barrel, with the sound of the Italian a; so we hear war, quart, and quarrel, with the German a. Equator, quaver, and words ending with hard c, g, and f, have departed from this rule; but a sufficient number of words are left to indicate plainly what is the analogy, and to direct us where usage is doubtful.

QUADRANTAL, kwá-drán'tál, a. Included in the fourth part of a circle.

QUADRATE, kwá'dráte, a. 91. Square, having four equal or parallel sides; divisible into four equal parts; suited, applicable.

QUICKSILVER, kwîk'sîl-vûr, s. 98. A mineral substance, mercury.

QUICKSILVERED, kwîk'sîl-vûrd, a. 359. Overlaid with quicksilver.

QUIDDIT, kwîd-dît, s. A subtilty, an equivocation.

QUIDDITY, kwîd'ê-tê, s. Essence, that which is a proper answer to the question, Quid est? a scholastic term; a trifling nicety, a cavil.

☞ This is derived from the barbarous Latin word Quidditas, and can be literally explained by nothing but a word as barbarous in English, Whattity.

QUIESCENCE, kwî-ês'sênsê, s. 510. Rest, repose.

QUIESCENT, kwî-ês'sênt, a. Resting, not being in motion.

QUIET, kwî'êt, a. 99. Still, peaceable; not in motion; not ruffled.

QUIET, kwî'êt, s. Rest, repose, tranquillity.

To QUIET, kwî'êt, v. a. To calm, to lull, to pacify; to still.

QUIETER, kwî'êt-tûr, s. The person or thing that quiets.

QUIETISM, kwî'êt-îzm, s. Tranquillity of mind. The doctrine of Quietists.

QUIETIST, kwî'êt-tîst, s. One who follows the doctrine of Quietism, taught by Molinos, a Spanish priest, and condemned by the Church of Rome.

QUINCUNCIAL, kwîn-kûng'shâl, a. 408. Having the form of a quincunx.

QUINCUNX, kwîng'kûngks, s. Quincunx order is a plantation of trees, disposed originally in a square, consisting of five trees, one at each corner, and a fifth in the middle, which disposition, repeated again and again, forms a regular grove, wood, or wilderness.

☞ As the accent is on the first syllable of this word, it is under the same predicament as the first syllable of Congregate.—See Principles, No. 408.

QUINQUANGULAR, kwîn-kwâng'gû-lâr, a. 408. Having five corners.

↪ 559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fät 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pline 105, pîn 107—nô 162, môte 164,

QUINQUENNIAL, kwîn-kwên²-nê-âl, a. Lasting five years, happening once in five years.

QUINSY, kwîn²-zê, s. A tumid inflammation in the throat.

QUINT, kînt, s. A set of five; sequents of five. A term at cards, pronounced Kent.

QUINTAIN, kwîn²-tîn, s. 208. A post with a turning top.

QUINTESSENCE, kwîn²-tês²-sênsê, s. A fifth being; an extract from any thing, containing all its virtues in a small quantity.

↪ All our orthoëpists but Dr. Ash place the accent on the first syllable of this word. My opinion is, that it may have the accent either on the first or second, as the rhythm of the phrase requires, 524; and this word, perhaps, requires it oftener on the second than the first.

QUINTILE, kwîn²-tîl, s. 140. An aspect of the planets, comprehending seventy-two degrees, or a fifth part of the heavens.

QUINTIN, kwîn²-tîn, s. An upright post for the exercise of tilting.

QUIP, kwîp, s. A sharp jest, a taunt.

QUIRE, kwîre, s. A body of singers, a chorus; the part of the church where the service is sung; a bundle of paper consisting of twenty-four sheets.

To QUIRE, kwîre, v. n. To sing in concert.

QUIRISTER, kwîr²-rîs-tûr, s. Chorister, one who sings in concert, generally in divine service.

↪ There is a vulgar pronunciation of the first i in this word, which gives it the sound of short e; this sound is proper in quirk where the r is succeeded by a consonant, but not in the word in question, where this letter is succeeded by a vowel.—See Principles, No. 108.

QUIRK, kwêrk, s. 108. Quick stroke, sharp fit; smart taunt; subtily, nicety, artful distinction; loose light tune.

To QUIT, kwît, v. a. To discharge an obligation, to make even; to set free; to carry through, to discharge, to perform; to clear himself of an affair; to repay, to requite; to vacate obligations; to pay an obligation, to clear a debt, to be tantamount; to abandon, to forsake; to resign, to give up.

QUITS, kwîts, interj. An exclamation used when any thing is repaid, and the parties become even.

QUITTANCE, kwîr²-tânse, s. Discharge from a debt or obligation, an acquittance; recompense, repayment.

To QUITTANCE, kwîr²-tânse, v. a. To repay, to recompense.

QUITTERBONE, kwîr²-tûr-bône, s. A hard round swelling upon the coronet, between the heel and the quarter. Said of a horse.

QUIVER, kwîv²-vûr, s. 98. A case for arrows.

To QUIVER, kwîv²-vûr, v. n. To quake, to play with a tremulous motion; to shiver, to shudder.

QUIVERED, kwîv²-vûrd, a. 395. Furnished with a quiver; sheathed as in a quiver.

QUODLIBET, kwôd²-lê-bêt, s. A nice point, a subtily.

QUOIF, kwôif, s. 415. Properly Coif. Any cap with which the head is covered; the cap of a serjeant at law.—See Coif.

To QUOIF, kwôif, v. a. 415. To cap, to dress with a head-dress.

QUOIFFURE, kwôif²-ûre, s. Properly Coiffure. Head-dress.

QUOIT, kwôit, s. 415. Properly Coit. Something thrown to a great distance to a certain point; the discus of the ancients is sometimes called in English quoit, but improperly.

↪ Till the orthography of a word is fixed, it will not be easy to settle its pronunciation. That the words quoif and quoit ought to be written coif and coit, appears from the derivation of the first from the French coiffe, and of the second from the Dutch coete; and if this be granted, it will necessarily follow that we ought to pronounce them coif and coit, 415.

To QUOIT, kwôit, v. n. To throw quoits, to play at quoits.

To QUOIT, kwôit, v. a. To throw.

QUODAM, kwôd²-dâm, a. Having been formerly. A ludicrous word.

QUOTATION, kwôd²-tâ-shûn, s. 415. The act of quoting, citation; passage adduced out of an author as evidence or illustration.

↪ In this and similar words Mr. Sheridan, and several respectable orthoëpists, pronounce the qu like k, but, as Mr. Nares justly observes, it is not easy to say why. If it be answered, that the Latins so pronounced these letters, it may be replied, that when we alter our Latin pronunciation, it will be time enough to alter those English words which are derived from that language.

To QUOTE, kwôte, v. a. To cite an author, or the words of another.

QUOTER, kwô²-tûr, s. 98. Citer, he that quotes.

QUOTH, kwô²th, or kwôth, verb imp. Quoth I, say I, or said I; Quoth he, says he, or said he.

↪ Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, W. Johnson, Mr. Nares, Mr. Perry, and Mr. Smith, pronounce the o in this word long, as in both; but Buchanan short, as in moth. This latter pronunciation is certainly more agreeable to the general sound of o before th, as in broth, froth, cloth, &c.; but my ear fails me if I have not always heard it pronounced like the o in doth, as if written kweth, which is the pronunciation Mr. Elphinston gives it, and, in my opinion, is the true one.

QUOTIDIAN, kwô²-tid²-jê-ân, a. Daily, happening every day.

QUOTIDIAN, kwô²-tid²-jê-ân, s. 224. 293.

A quotidian fever, a fever which returns every day.

QUOTIENT, kwô²-shênt, s. In Arithmetick, Quotient is the number produced by the division of the two given numbers, the one by the other. Thus, divide 12 by 4, and 3 is the Quotient.

R.

To RABATE, râ²-bâte, v. n. In Falconry, to recover a hawk to the fist again.

To RABBIT, râb²-bit, v. a. 99. To pare down pieces of wood so as to fit one another.

RABBIT, râb²-bit, s. A joint made by paring two pieces, so that they wrap over one another.

RABBI, râb²-bê, or râb²-bl, } s.

RABBIN, râb²-bin, }
A doctor among the Jews.

↪ The first of these words, when pronounced in Scripture, ought to have the last syllable like the verb to buy.

RABBINICAL, râb²-bin²-ê-kâl, a. Belonging to the Rabbins.

RABBIT, râb²-bit, s. A furry animal that lives on plants, and burrows in the ground.

RABBLE, râb²-bl, s. 405. A tumultuous crowd, an assembly of low people.

RABLEMENT, râb²-bl-mênt, s. Crowd, tumultuous assembly of mean people.

RABID, râb²-bid, a. 544. Fierce, furious, mad.

RACE, râse, s. A family ascending; family descending; a generation, a collective family; a particular breed; Race of ginger, a root or sprig of ginger; a particular strength or taste of wine; contest in running; course on the feet; progress, course.

RADICATION, rá-dé-ká-shún, s. The act of fixing deep.

RADICLE, rá-dé-kl, s. 405. That part of the seed of a plant which becomes its root.

RADISH, rá-dísh, s. A root which is commonly cultivated in the kitchen gardens.

↳ This word is commonly, but corruptly, pronounced as if written reddish. The deviation is but small; nor do I think it so incorrigible as that of its brother ecculents, Asparagus, Cucumber, and Lettuce; which see.

RADIUS, rá-dé-ús, or rá-jé-ús, s. 293, 294. The semidiameter of a circle; a bone of the fore-arm, which accompanies the ulna from the elbow to the wrist.

To RAFFLE, ráfl, v. n. 405. To cast dice for a prize.

RAGINGLY, rá-jing-lé, ad. With vehement fury.

RAGMAN, rág-mán, s. 88. One who deals in rags.

RAGOUT, rá-góud, s. French. Meat stewed and highly seasoned.

RAGSTONE, rág-stone, s. A stone so named from its breaking in a rugged manner; the stone with which they smooth the edge of a tool new found and left ragged.

RAGWORT, rág-wúrt, s. 166. A plant.

RAIL, rále, s. 202. A cross beam fixed at the ends in two upright posts; a series of posts connected with beams, by which any thing is enclosed; a kind of bird; a woman's upper garment.

To RAIL, rále, v. a. To enclose with rails; to range in a line.

To RAIL, rále, v. n. To use insolent and reproachful language.

RAILER, rále-úr, s. 98. One who insults or defames by opprobrious language.

RAILING, rálling, s. A series of rails; reproachful language.

RAILLERY, rállér-é, s. Slight satire, satirical merriment.

↳ We must not suppose this word to be the offspring of the English word rail, however nearly they may be sometimes allied in practice. Raillery comes directly from the French word railleurie; and, in compliment to that language for the assistance it so often affords us, we pronounce the first syllable nearly as in the original. This, however, is not a mere compliment, like the generality of those we pay the French; for, were we to pronounce the first syllable like rail, it might obscure and pervert the meaning. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, and Mr. Smith, pronounce it as I have marked it.

RAIMENT, rá-mént, s. 202. Vesture, vestment, clothes, dress, garment.

To RAIN, ráne, v. n. 202. To fall in drops from the clouds; to fall as rain; it Rains, the water falls from the clouds.

RAINBOW, ráne-bó, s. 327. The iris, the semicircle of various colours which appears in showery weather.

RAINDEER, ráne-déer, s. A deer with large horns, which, in the northern regions, draws sledges through the snow.

RAININESS, ráne-é-nés, s. The state of being showery.

RAINY, ráne-é, a. Showery, wet.

To RAISE, ráze, v. a. 202. To lift, to heave; to set upright; to erect, to build up; to exalt to a state more great or illustrious; to increase in current value; to elevate; to advance, to prefer; to excite, to put in action; to excite to war or tumult, to stir up; to rouse, to stir up; to give beginning to, as he raised the family; to bring into being; to call into view from the state of separate spirits; to bring from death to life; to occasion, to begin; to set up, to utter loudly; to collect, to obtain a certain sum; to collect, to assemble, to levy; to give rise to; to Raise paste, to form paste into pies without a dish.

RAISER, ráze-úr, s. 98. He that raises.

→ 559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fät 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pine 105, pin 107—nô 162, môte 164,

RAISIN, rai'zn, s. A dried grape.

↳ If antiquity can give a sanction to the pronunciation of a word, this may be traced as far back as the days of Queen Elizabeth. Falstaff, in the first part of Henry the Fourth, being urged by the Prince to give reasons for his conduct, tells him, that if raisins were as plenty as blackberries, he would not give him one upon compulsion. This pun evidently shows these words were pronounced exactly alike in Shakespeare's time, and that Mr. Sheridan's pronunciation of this word, as if written ray-s'n, is not only contrary to general usage, but, what many would think a greater offence, destructive of the wit of Shakespeare. Mr. Sheridan has Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, and W. Johnston, on his side; and I have Dr. Kenrick and Mr. Nares on mine.

RAKE, rake, s. An instrument with teeth, by which the ground is divided; a loose, disorderly, vicious, wild, gay, thoughtless fellow.

To RAKE, rake, v. a. To gather with a rake; to draw together by violence; to scour, to search with eager and vehement diligence; to heap together and cover; to fire on a ship in the direction of head and stern.

RAMMISH, ram'mish, a. Strong scented.

RAMOUS, ram'mús, a. 314. Branchy, consisting of branches.

To RAMP, ramp, v. n. To leap with violence; to climb as a plant.

RAMP, ramp, s. Leap, spring.

RAMPALLIAN, ram-pâl'yan, s. 113. A mean wretch. Not in use.

RAMPANCY, ram'pân-sé, s. Prevalence, exuberance.

RAMPANT, ramp'ant, a. Exuberant, overgrowing restraint; in Heraldry, Rampant is when the lion is reared up in the escutcheon, as it were, ready to combat with his enemy.

RAMPART, ram'part, } s,

RAMPIRE, ram'pire, } s,
The platform of the wall behind the parapet; the wall round fortified places.

↳ Mr. Sheridan spells this word rampyr, and pronounces the y in the last syllable short; but this is contrary to Dr. Johnson's orthography, and the pronunciation is in opposition to analogy.—See Umpire.

RAN, ran, Pret. of Run.

To RANCH, rânsh, v. a. (Corrupted from Wrench.) To sprain, to injure with violent contortion.

RANCID, rán'sid, a. Strong scented.

RANCIDNESS, rán'sid-nés, } s.

RANDOM, rán'dúm, s. 166. Want of direction, want of rule or method; chance, hazard, roving motion.

RANDOM, rán'dúm, a. Done by chance, roving without direction.

RANG, râng, Pret. of Ring.

To RANGE, rânje, v. a. 74. To place in order, to put in ranks; to rove over.

To RANGE, rânje, v. n. To rove at large; to be placed in order.

RANGE, rânje, s. A rank, any thing placed in a line; a class, an order; excursion, wandering; room for excursion; compass taken in by any thing excursionive.

RANGER, rân'júr, s. 98. One that ranges, a rover; a dog that beats the ground; an officer who tends the game of a forest.

RANK, rânk, a. 408. High growing, strong, luxuriant; fruitful, bearing strong plants; strong scented, rancid; high tasted, strong in quality; rampant, high grown; gross, coarse.

RANK, rânk, s. Line of men p. a breast; a row; range of subordination; class, order; degree of dignity; dignity, high place, as, He is a man of Rank.

To RANK, rânk, v. a. To place a breast; to range in any particular class; to arrange methodically.

To RANK, rânk, v. n. To be ranged, to be placed.

To RANKLE, rânk'kl, v. n. To fester, to breed corruption, to be inflamed in body or mind.

RANKLY, rânk'lé, ad. Coarsely, grossly.

RANKNESS, rânk'nés, s. Exuberance, superfluity of growth.

RANNY, rán'né, s. The shrewmouse.

To RANSACK, rán'sák, v. a. To plunder, to pillage, to search narrowly.

RANSOME, rán'súm, s. 166. Price paid for redemption from captivity or punishment.

↳ I cannot conceive Dr. Johnson's reason for writing this word with the final e, since it comes from the French rançon, and all his examples are without this letter.

To RANSOME, rán'súm, v. a. To redeem from captivity or punishment.

RANSOMELESS, rán'súm-lés, a. Free from ransom.

To RANT, rant, v. n. To rave in violent or high sounding language.

RAPPER, râp'pür, s. 98. One who strikes.

RAPPORT, râp-pört', s. French. Relation, reference.

RAPSODY, râp'sô-dé, s.

↳ A Rhapsody was originally the title of Homer's Poems, and meant no more than a collection of several smaller parts into one; but is now applied to any wild or unconnected effusions of imagination. As the R in the Greek ῥαψωδία has the rough breathing, this word is better written rhapsody.

RAPTURE, râp'tshûre, s. 461. Ecstasy, transport, violence of any pleasing passion; rapidity, haste.

RAPTURED, râp'tshûrd, a. 359. Ravished, transported.

RAPTUROUS, râp'tshûr'ûs, a. 314. Ecstatick, transporting.

RARE, râre, a. Scarce, uncommon; excellent, valuable to a degree seldom found; thinly scattered; thin, subtle, not dense; raw, not fully subdued by the fire.—See Rear.

RAREESHOW, râ-ré-shô, s. A show carried in a box.

RAREFACTION, râ-ré-fâk'shûn, s. Extension of the parts of a body, that makes it take up more room than it did before.

RAREFIABLE, râ-ré-fî-â-bl, a. Admitting rarefaction.

To RAREFY, râ-ré-fî, v. a. 183. To make thin, contrary to condense.

To RAREFY, râ-ré-fî, v. n. To become thin.

RARELY, râre-lé, ad. Seldom, not often; finely, nicely, accurately.

RARENESS, râre-nés, s. Uncommonness, value arising from scarcity.

RARITY, râ-ré-té, s. Uncommonness, infrequency; a thing valued for its scarcity.

RARITY, râ-ré-té, s. 530. Thinness, subtlety, the contrary to density.

↳ The difference in the pronunciation of these words is not only necessary to convey their different signification, but to show their different etymology. The first comes to us from the French rareté, and the last from the Latin raritas; which, therefore, according to the most settled analogy of our language, ought to have the antepenultimate syllable short.—See Principles, No. 511; also the word Charity.

RASCAL, râs-kâl, s. 88. A mean fellow, a scoundrel.

RASCALION, râs-kâl'yûn, s. 113. One of the lowest people.

RASCALITY, râs-kâl'é-té, s. The low mean people.

RASCALLY, râs-kâl'é, a. Mean, worthless.

To RASE, râze, or râce, v. a.—See Raze. To skim, to strike on the surface; to overthrow, to destroy, to ront up; to blot out by rasure, to erase.

↳ There seems to be no small difficulty in settling the orthography and pronunciation of this word. Dr. Johnson advises, when it signifies to strike slightly, to write it rase; and when it signifies to ruin, râze. Whatever may be the utility of this distinction to the eye, the ear seems to have made no such distinction in the sound of the s; as graze, which is evidently formed from this word, and seems to have been adopted for the purpose of signifying to strike slightly, has preserved the z; while erase, which means to destroy, to expunge, to take away entirely, is by all our orthoëpists, except Dr. Kenrick, pronounced with the s pure. But rase, whether signifying to strike slightly, or to overthrow, has been so generally pronounced with the s like z, that most of our writers have adopted the latter character; and this sound, it may be observed, seems more agreeable to the analogy of verbs in this termination than that in erase, 457. 467. But as nothing seems to be more fixed in the language than the sharp hissing sound of s in erase, so if analogy and usage were to compound the difference, perhaps it would be easier to bring rase to the sound of race, as Mr. Elphinston has done, than erase to the sound of eraze, as Dr. Kenrick has done: but to sound it with the hissing s when it is written rase, as Mr. Sheridan has done, is a solecism in pronunciation; for though s often goes into the sound of z, z never goes into that of s.

The confusion observable among our authors in this word sufficiently shows how inconvenient it is to make the same letters sound differently when a different sense is conveyed. Dr. Johnson seems aware of this when he recommends a different orthography for this word, as it acquires a different meaning; but he does not tell us whether rase is to be pronounced like race or rase; nor do any of our orthoëpists make this distinction of sound according to the sense. With great deference to Dr. Johnson, perhaps such a distinction, both in sound and spelling, is unnecessary and embarrassing. The best way, therefore, in my opinion, will be always to spell this word with the z, as razor, and to pronounce it with the z, when it is written rase.—See Bout.

RASH, râsh, a. Hasty, violent, precipitate.

RASH, râsh, s. An efflorescence on the body, a breaking out.

RASHER, râsh'ûr, s. 98. A thin slice of bacon.

RASHLY, râsh'lé, ad. Hastily, violently, without due consideration.

RASHNESS, râsh'nés, s. Foolish contempt of danger.

RASP, râsp, s. A delicious berry that grows on a species of the bramble, a raspberry.

To RASP, râsp, v. a. To rub to powder with a very rough file.

RASP, râsp, s. A large rough file, commonly used to wear away wood.

RASPATORY, râsp'â-tûr'é, s. A chirurgon's rasp.

RASPBERRY, or RASBERRY, râs'bér'é, s. A kind of berry.

RASPBERRY-BUSH, râs'bér'é-bûsh, s. A species of bramble.

RASURE, râ-zhûre, s. 452. The act of scraping or shaving; a mark in a writing where something has been rubbed out.—See Rase.

RAT, rât, s. An animal of the mouse kind that infests houses and ships; to smell a Rat, to be put on the watch by suspicion.

RATABLE, râ-tâ-bl, a. Set at a certain rate or value.

RATABLY, râ-tâ-blé, ad. Proportionably.

RATAFIA, râ-tâ-fé'â, s. A fine liquor, prepared from the kernels of apricots and spirits.

RATAN, râ-tân', s. An Indian cane.

RATE, râte, s. Price fixed on any thing; allowance settled; degree, comparative height or value; quantity assignable; that which sets value; manner of doing any thing; degree to which any thing is done; tax imposed by the parish.

To RATE, râte, v. a. To value at a certain price; to chide hastily and vehemently.

RATH, râth, a. Early, coming before the time.

RATHER, râth'ûr, or râ-thûr, ad. More willingly, with better liking; preferably to the other, with better reason; in a greater degree than otherwise; more properly; especially; to have Rather, to desire in preference, a bad expression; it should be, With rather.

↳ Dr. Johnson tells us, that this word is the comparative of rath, a Saxon word, signifying soon, and that it still retains its original signification; as we may say, "I would sooner do a thing," with as much propriety as, "I would rather do it." Some very respectable speakers pronounce this word with the first syllable like that in râ-ven; and Mr. Nares has adopted this pronunciation. Dr. Ash and Bailey seem to be of the same opinion; but all the other orthoëpists, from whom we can certainly know the quantity of the vowel, as, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, and Entick, make it short. There is a pronunciation of this, and some few other words, which may not improperly be called diminutive. Thus, in familiar conversation, when we wish to express very little, we sometimes lengthen the vowel, and pronounce the word as if written leete. In the same manner, when rather signifies just preferable, we lengthen the first vowel, and pronounce it long and slender, as if written rather; and this, perhaps, may be the reason that the long slender sound of the vowel has so much obtained; for usage seems to be clearly on the side of the other pronunciation, and analogy requires it, as this word is but the old comparative of the word rath, soon.

RATIFIA, râ't-ê-fê'e', s. A liquor, flavoured with fruit kernels.

RATIFICATION, râ't-tê-fê-kâ'shûn, s. The act of ratifying, confirmation.

RATIFIER, râ't-tê-fl-ûr, s. 98. The person or thing that ratifies.

To RATIFY, râ't-tê-fl, v. a. To confirm, to settle.

RATIO, râ'shê-b, s. Proportion.

To RATIOCINATE, râsh-ê-ô's-ê-nâ'te, v. a. To reason, to argue.

RATIOCINATION, râsh-ê-ô's-ê-nâ'shûn, s. 536. The act of reasoning, the act of deducing consequences from premises.

RATIONAL, râsh'ûn-âl, a. 507. Having the power of reasoning; agreeable to reason; wise, judicious, as, a Rational man.

RATIONALIST, râsh'ûn-âl-lîst, s. One who proceeds in his disquisitions and practice wholly upon reason.

RATIONALITY, râsh-ê-ô-nâl-ê-tê, s. The power of reasoning; reasonableness.

RATIONALLY, râsh'ûn-âl-ê, ad. Reasonably, with reason.

RATIONALNESS, râsh'ûn-âl-nês, s. The state of being rational.

RAVEN, râ-vn, s. 103. A large black owl,

To RAVEN, râv-vn, v. a. 103. To devour with great eagerness and rapacity.

↪ After enumerating several derivations of this word, Skinner seems at last to have fixed on the true one, by deriving it from the word raren, as this bird is the most voracious and greedy of all others.

RAVENOUS, râv-vn-ûs, a. Furiously voracious, hungry to rage.

RAVENOUSLY, râv-vn-ûs-lê, ad. With raging voracity.

REAR, rēre, s. 227. The hinder troop of an army, or the hinder line of a fleet; the last class.

REAR, rēre, a. 227. Raw, half roasted, half sodden.

☞ This word is frequently, but corruptly, pronounced as if written rare. But though rear, rhyming with rear, is the true pronunciation, we must not suppose it to have the least affinity and signification with rear, behind. Junius and Skinner derive this word from the Saxon word hrere, signifying fluent or trembling like the white or yolk of an egg when uncoagulated; hence Junius explains the phrase a Rear-egg, a trembling egg; and Skinner imagines that this word may come from the Greek word ῥῆμα, to flow, because uncoagulated eggs easily flow or move about; or he supposes that our word rear, and the Saxon hrere, may possibly come from the Latin rarus, as opposed to dense, because eggs, when boiled, lose their fluidity, and grow thick. This derivation of Skinner seems a little too far fetched. Whatever may be its origin in the Saxon, it seems to have been used in that language for crude and uncoagulated; from the Saxon it comes to us in that sense, and, in my opinion, ought to be written as well as pronounced Rere.

To REAR, rēre, v. a. To raise up; to lift up from a fall; to bring up to maturity; to educate, to instruct; to exalt, to elevate; to rouse, to stir up.

REARWARD, rēre-wārd, s. The last troop; the end, the tail, the train behind; the latter part.

RECEPTACLE, rê-sêp-tâ-kl, or rê-sêp'tâ-kl, s. A vessel or place into which any thing is received.

→ The first of these pronunciations is by far the most fashionable, but the second most agreeable to analogy and the ear. So many mutes in the latter syllables require the aid of the antepenultimate accent to pronounce them with ease, and they ought always to have it.—See deceptible and Corruptible.

The best way to show what is the general usage in the accentuation of this word, will be to give it as accented by different orthoëpists.

RECEPTIVE, rê-sêp'tîv, a. Having the quality of admitting what is communicated.

RECEPTORY, rê-sêp-tûr'ê, a. Generally or popularly admitted.

→ Dr. Johnson and Mr. Sheridan place the accent on the first syllable of this word, and on the second of deceptory; but as these words are both of the same form, till some reason can be given for accenting them differently, I shall consider them both as accented on the first syllable, as that accentuation appears to be not only most agreeable to polite usage, but to the general analogy of words of this termination.—See Peremptory.

A view of the diversity of accentuation among our orthoëpists, will enable the inspector to judge of the propriety of that which I have adopted:

RECONCILEABLE, r^ék-k^ón-s^í-lá-bl, a. Capable of renewed kindness; consistent, possible to be made consistent.

Though Dr. Johnson and Mr. Sheridan have written Reconcilable, Unreconcilable, and Reconcilableness, with the mute e in the middle of these words, they have omitted it in Irreconcilable, Irreconcilably, and Irreconcilableness. This has sometimes occasioned an impropriety in the pronunciation of these words, by sounding the preceding i short, as in silver, and giving the words a syllable more than they ought to have, as if divided into Recon-sil-e-able, &c. but as the orthography is wrong, so is the pronunciation. The mute e ought to have no place, when followed by a vowel, in words of our own composition, where the preceding vowel has its general sound; and therefore, as it is Inclinable, Desirable, &c. so it ought to be Reconcilable, Reconcilably, &c. This was the orthography adopted by Dyche before it became so fashionable to imitate the French.—See More-able.

RECONCILEABLENESS, r^ék-k^ón-s^í-lá-bl-n^és, s. Consistence, possibility to be reconciled; disposition to renew love.

RECONCILEMENT, r^ék'^lk^ón-s^íle-m^ént, s. Reconciliation, renewal of kindness, favour restored, friendship renewed.

RECONCILIATION, r^ék-k^ón-s^í-lá-sh^un, s. Renewal of friendship.

To RECONDENSE, r^é-k^ón-d^éns^e, v. a. To condense anew.

RECONDITE, r^ék'^lk^ón-d^íte, a. Secret, profound, abstruse.

Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Barclay, Mr. Nares, Mr. Scott, Mr. Fry, and Entick, accent this word on the second syllable; Mr. Sheridan and Bailey on the last; and Fenning only on the first. But notwithstanding so many authorities are against me, I am much deceived if the analogy of pronunciation be not decidedly in favour of that accentuation which I have given. We have but few instances in the language where we receive a word from the Latin, by dropping a syllable, that we do

559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fät 81—mê 93, mét 95—plue 105, pin 107—nò 162, môve 164, not remove the accent higher than the original, 505. Thus recondite, derived from reconditus, may with as much propriety remove the accent from the long penultimate, as, carbuncle from carbunculus; calumny from calumniā; detriment from detrimentum; innocency from innocentia; controvery from controversia; and a thousand others. Besides, it may be observed, that Mr. Sheridan and Bailey, by accenting this word on the last syllable, do not decide against the accent on the first; for all words of three syllables, which may be accented on the last, may also have an accent on the first, though not inversely, 524. The antepenultimate accent, to which our language has such a tendency, ought, in my opinion, to be indulged in this word, notwithstanding the numerous authorities against it. The word incondite must certainly follow the fortunes of the present word; and we find those orthoepists who have the word, accent it as they do recondite, Mr. Sheridan on the last syllable, but Mr. Fenning inconsistently on the second.

To RECONDUCT, ré-kôn-dûkt', v. a. To conduct again.

RECORD, rék'ôrd, or ré-kôrd', s. Register, authentick memorial.

The noun record was anciently, as well as at present, pronounced with the accent either on the first or second syllable; till lately, however, it generally conformed to the analogy of other words of this kind; and we seldom heard the accent on the second syllable, till a great luminary of the law, as remarkable for the justness of his elocution as his legal abilities, revived the claim this word anciently had to the ultimate accent; and since his time this pronunciation, especially in our courts of justice, seems to have been the most general. We ought, however, to recollect, that this is overturning one of the most settled analogies of our language in the pronunciation of dissyllable nouns and verbs of the same form.—See Principles, No. 492.

"But many a crime, deem'd innocent on earth,

"Registered in heav'n; and there no doubt

 A nonconformist.
 (→) I must in this word retract my former opinion, and give the preference to the accent on the second syllable. Mr. Sheridan and W. Johnson might, like myself, suppose usage on their side; but the authority of Drs. Johnson, Ash, Kenrick, Mr. Nares, Perry, Barclay, Fenning, Bailey, Dyche, and Entick, is sufficient to make us suspect that usage has not so clearly decided; and therefore, though some words of this form and number of syllables depart from the accentuation of the Latin words from which they are derived, as ignorant, laborant, adjutant, permanent, confident, &c. yet the general rule seems to incline to the preservation of the accent of the original, when the same number of syllables are preserved in the English word—to say nothing of the more immediate formation of this word from the judicial verb to recuse. See Principles, Nos. 437 and 503, 6 and 8.

 ⚡ Almost all the Dictionaries I have consulted, except Mr. Sheridan's, place the accent on the second syllable of this word; and yet, so prevalent has the latter accentuation been of late years, that Mr. Nares is reduced to hope it is not fixed beyond recovery. There is, indeed, one reason why this word ought not to have the accent on the first syllable, and that is, the two mutes in the second and third, which are not so easily pronounced when the accent is removed from them, as the mutes and liquids in accessory, consistory, ausultory, &c.; and therefore I am decidedly in favour of the accentuation on the second syllable, which is that adopted by Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Nares, Buchanan, Perry, Scott, Bailey, Barclay, and Entick, as all words of this termination have the accent on the same syllable. See Refractory, Peremptory, Corruptible, and Irrefragable.

REFRACTORY, rē-frāk-tūr-ē, a. Obstinate, perverse, contumacious.
 ⚡ All our orthoepists, except Bailey and Dyche, place the accent on the second syllable of this word; and we need but attend to the difficulty and indistinctness which arises from placing the accent on the first syllable, to condemn it. The mutes c hard and t are formed by parts of the organs so distant from each other, that, without the help of the accent to strengthen the organs, they are not very easily pronounced—to say nothing of the difficulty of pronouncing the substantive refractoriness and the adverb refractorily with the accent on the first syllable, which must necessarily be the case if we accent the first syllable of this word.—See Corruptible.
REFRAGABLE, rē-frā-gā-bl, a. Capable of confutation and conviction.
 ⚡ In this word there is not the same concurrence of consonants as in the last, and consequently not the same reason for placing the accent on the second syllable.—See Irrefragable.

RELENTLESS, rê-lênt-lês, a. Unpitiful, unmoved by kindness or tenderness.

RELEVANT, rêl-ê-vânt, a. Relieving.—See Irrelevant.

↪ In the first edition of this Dictionary I apprehended that this word was a new coinage of the House of Commons; but upon consulting Mr. Elphinstone, a complete judge in this case, I find it has long been a jurisprudential word, as he calls it, in Scotland, meaning inferential or conclusive; and that it has only been transferred from the Scotch Bar to the British Parliament. But that this is not the sense of the French relavant, or the Latin relevato, is certain; and that relevant in this sense seems nearly the same as relative or related. To say nothing of the impropriety of introducing technical words in a general assembly of the nation, it may be observed, that using the word in this sense, which is that which it generally has in our parliamentary debates, tends to overturn the most settled meaning of words, and, instead of precision and accuracy, to create obscurity and confusion.

RELEVATION, rê-lé-vá-shûn, s. A raising or lifting up.

RELIANCE, rê-lí-ânse, s. Trust, dependence, confidence.

RELICK, rê-lík, s. That which remains, that which is left after the loss or decay of the rest; it is generally used in the plural: it is often taken for the body deserted by the soul; that which is kept in memory of another with a kind of religious veneration.

RELICT, rê-líkt, s. A widow, a wife desolate by the death of her husband.

RELIEF, rê-léef, s. 275. The prominence of a figure in stone or metal, the seeming prominence of a picture; the recommendation of any thing by the interposition of something different; alleviation of calamity, mitigation of pain or sorrow; that which frees from pain or sorrow; dismissal of a sentinel from his post; legal remedy of wrongs.

RELIEVABLE, rê-léev-á-bl, a. Capable of relief.

To RELIEVE, rê-léev, v. a. To support, to assist; to ease pain or sorrow; to succour by assistance: to set a sentinel at rest, by placing another on his post; to right by law.

RELIEVER, rê-léev-úr, s. One that relieves.

RELIEVO, rê-léev-ó, s. The prominence of a figure or picture.

To RELIGHT, rê-líte, v. a. 393. To light anew.

RELIGION, rê-líd-jûn, s. 290. Virtue, as founded upon reverence of God, and expectation of future rewards and punishments; a system of Divine faith and worship, as opposite to others.

RELIGIONIST, rê-líd-jûn-íst, s. A bigot to any religious persuasion.

RELIGIOUS, rê-líd-jûs, a. Pious, disposed to the duties of religion; teaching religion; among the Romanists, bound by the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience; exact, strict.

RELIGIOUSNESS, rê-líd-jûs-nés, s. The quality or state of being religious.

To RELINQUISH, rê-líng-kwísh, v. a. 408. To forsake, to abandon; to quit, to release, to give up.

RELINQUISHMENT, rê-líng-kwísh-mént, s. 408. The act of forsaking.

RELISH, rê-lísh, s. Taste, the effect of any thing on the palate; it is commonly used of a pleasing taste, small quantity just perceptible; liking, delight, in any thing; sense, power of perceiving excellence, taste.

To RELISH, rê-lísh, v. a. To give a taste to any thing; to taste, to have a liking.

To RELISH, rê-lísh, v. n. To have a pleasing taste; to give pleasure; to have a flavour.

RELISHABLE, rê-lísh-á-bl, a. Having a relish.

To RELIVE, rê-lív, v. n. To revive, to live anew.

To RELOVE, rê-lúv, v. a. To love in return.

RELUCENT, rê-lú-sént, a. Shining, transparent.

RELUCTANCE, rê-lúk-tânse, } s.

RELUCTANCY, rê-lúk-tân-sé, } s.
Unwillingness, repugnance.

RELUCTANT, rê-lúk-tánt, a. Unwilling, acting with repugnance.

RELUCATION, rê-lúk-tá-shûn, s. 530. Repugnance, resistance.

To REMAND, rê-mánd, v. a. 79. To send back, to call back.

REMANENT, rê-má-nént, s. The part of remaining.

↪ I place the accent on the first syllable of this word, for the same reason as in permanent: the a in both remaneo and permaneo is short, if that be any rule.—See Principles, No. 503, e. It is highly probable that remenant is but an abbreviation of the present word.

REMARK, rê-márk, s. 78. Observation, note, notice taken.

To REMARK, rê-márk, v. a. To note, to observe; to distinguish, to point out, to mark.

REMARKABLE, rê-márk-á-bl, a. Observable, worthy of note.

REMARKABLENESS, rê-márk-á-bl-nés, s. Observableness, worthiness of observation.

REMARKABLY, rê-márk-á-blé, ad. Observably, in a manner worthy of observation.

REMEDIAL, rê-mé-dé-á-bl, a. Capable of remedy.

REMEDIAL, rê-mé-dé-át, a. 91. Medicinal, affording a remedy.

REMEDILESS, rê-mé-dé-lés, a. Not admitting remedy, irreparable, cureless.

↪ Spenser and Milton place the accent upon the second syllable of this word; and as Mr. Nares observes, Dr. Johnson has, on the authority of these authors, adopted this accentuation: "But this," says Mr. Nares, "is irregular; for every monosyllabic termination, added to a word accented on the antepenult, throws the accent to the fourth syllable from the end." With great respect for Mr. Nares's opinion on this subject, I should think a much easier and more general rule might be laid down for all words of this kind, which is, that those words, which take the Saxon terminations after them, as er, less, ness, lessness, ly, &c. preserve the accent of the radical word; therefore, this and the following word ought to have the same accent as remedy, from which they are formed.—See Principles, No. 489, 501.

REMEDILESSNESS, rê-mé-dé-lés-nés, s. Incurableness.

REMEDY, rê-mé-dé, s. A medicine by which any illness is cured; cure of any uneasiness; that which counteracts any evil; reparation, means of repairing any hurt.

To REMEDY, rê-mé-dé, v. a. To cure, to heal; to repair or remove mischief.

To REMEMBER, rê-mém-búr, v. a. To bear in mind any thing; to recollect, to call to mind; to mention; to put in mind, to force to recollect, to remind.

REMOLTEN, rê-môl-tên, part. 163. Melted again.

REMONSTRANCE, rê-môn-strânse, s. Show, discovery; not used; strong representation.

To REMONSTRATE, rê-môn-strâte, v. n. To make a strong representation, to show reasons.

REMORA, rê-mô-râ, s. 92. 503. A let or obstacle; a fish or kind of worm that sticks to ships and retards their passage through the water.

REMORSE, rê-môrse, or rê-môrse, s. Pain of guilt; anguish of a guilty conscience.

↪ Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, Mr. Perry, and several respectable speakers, pronounce this word in the second manner; but Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, and Mr. Smith, in the first; and, in my opinion, with analogy and the best usage on their side. The final e does not lengthen the o, but serves only to keep the s from going into the sound of z.

REMORSEFUL, rê-môr-sê-fûl, a. Tender, compassionate. Not used.

REMORSELESS, rê-môr-sê-lêcs, a. Unpitying, cruel, savage.

REMOTE, rê-môte, a. Distant; removed far off; foreign.

To RENDEZVOUS, rênd-dê-vôoz, v. n. To meet at a place appointed.

↪ This word is in such universal use as to be perfectly anglicised; and those who leave out the s at the end, in compliment to the French language, show but little taste in their pronunciation of English. To this letter, in this word, as well as in several other words, may be applied the judicious advice of Pope:

“In words as fashions the same rule will hold;

“Alike fantastick, if too new or old;

“Be not the first by whom the new are try'd,

“Nor yet the last to lay the old aside.”

Essay on Criticism.

RENDITION, rênd-îsh-ûn, s. Surrendering, the act of yielding.

RENEGADE, rê-nê-gâde, } s.

RENITENCY, rê-nî-tên-sê, s. That resistance in solid bodies, when they press upon, or are impelled one against another.

↪ This word and the following were in Dr. Johnson's third edition, folio, accented on the second syllable; but in the sixth edition, quarto, they have the accent on the first. This latter accentuation, it must be allowed, is more agreeable to English analogy, see Principles, No. 503, b; but there is an analogy that the learned are very fond of adopting, which is, that when a word from the Latin contains the same number of syllables as the original, the accent of the original should then be preserved; and as the accent of renitens is on the second syllable, the word renitent ought to have the accent on the second likewise. For my own part I approve of our own analogy, both in accent and quantity; but it is the business of a prosodist to give the usage as well as analogy; and were this word and its formative renitency to be brought into common use, I have no doubt but that the Latin analogy, that of accenting this word on the second syllable, would generally prevail. This may fairly be presumed from the suffrages we have for it; namely, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, Buchanan, and Entick, who are opposed by no Dictionary I have consulted but by Scott's Bailey.

RESOLVE, rê-zôlv', s. Resolution, fixed determination.

RESOLVEDLY, rê-zôlv'êd-lê, ad. 365. With firmness and constancy.

RESOLVEDNESS, rê-zôlv'êd nês, s. Resolution, constancy, firmness.

RESOLVENT, rê-zôlv'ênt, s. That which has the power of causing solution.

RESOLVER, rê-zôlv'êr, s. 98. One that forms a firm resolution; one that dissolves, one that separates parts.

RESOLUTE, rê-zô-lûte, a. Determined, constant, firm.

RESOLUTELY, rê-zô-lûte-lê, ad. Determinately, steadily.

RESOLUTENESS, rê-zô-lûte-nês, s. Determinateness, state of being fixed in resolution.

RESOLUTION, rê-zô-lû'shûn, s. Act of clearing difficulties; analysis, act of separating any thing into constituent parts; dissolution; fixed determination, settled thought; firmness, steadiness in good or bad determination of a cause in courts of justice.

RESOLUTIVE, rê-zôl'û-tîv, a. 512. Having the power to dissolve.

RESONANCE, rê-zô-nânse, s. Sound, resound.

RESONANT, rê-zô-nânt, a. 503. Sounding, resounding.

To RESORT, rê-zôrt', v. n. To have recourse to; to frequent; to repair to; to fall back; a term in law.

↪ Some speakers pronounce this word so as to rhyme with sport; but as this is not the most usual pronunciation, so it is not the most agreeable to analogy. That it is not the most usual, appears from the testimony of Sheridan, Kenrick, Scott, Smith, W. Johnston, and Perry, who pronounce it as I have done.

RESORT, rê-zôrt', s. Frequency, assembly; concourse; movement, active power, spring.

To RESOUND, rê-zôund', v. a. To echo, to celebrate by sound; to tell so as to be heard far; to return sounds.

To RESOUND, rê-zôund', v. n. To be echoed back

To RESOUND, rê-zôund', v. a. 446. To sound again.

RESOURCE, rê-sôrse', s. 318. Some new or unexpected means that offer, resort, expedient.—See Source.

To RESOW, rê-sô', v. a. To sow anew.

To RESPEAK, rê-spêke', v. n. To answer.

To RESPECT, rê-spêkt', v. a. To regard, to have regard to; to consider with a low degree of reverence; to have relation to; to look toward.

RESPECT, rê-spêkt', s. Regard, attention; reverence, honour; awful kindness; good will; partial regard; reverend character; manner of treating others; consideration, motive; relation, regard.

RESPECTABLE, rê-spêkt'â-bl, a. Deserving of respect or regard.

↪ This word, like several others of the same form, is frequently distorted by an accent on the first syllable. When there are no uncombinable consonants in the latter syllable, this accentuation is not improper, as, de'spicable, disputable, preferable, &c.; but when consonants of so different an organ as ct and pt occur in the penultimate and antepenultimate syllables of words without the accent, the difficulty of pronouncing them is a sufficient reason for placing the accent on them in order to assist the pronunciation; and accordingly we find almost every word of this form has the accent upon these letters, as, de'lectable, de'structive, per'ceptible, sus'ceptible, dis'ceptible, &c.; besides, as it contributes greatly to place the accent on the most significant part of the word, when other reasons do not forbid, this ought to determine us to lay the stress upon the second syllable of the word in question. This is the accentuation of Mr. Scott, Mr. Buchanan, W. Johnston, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Barclay, Fenning, and Perry, had inserted the word in their Dictionaries, they would, in all probability, have accented the word in the same manner. Since the first edition of this Dictionary, I see this is the case with the quarto edition of Dr. Johnson.—See Acceptable, Corruptible, and Irrefragable.

RESPECTER, rê-spêkt'êr, s. 98. One that has partial regard.

RESPECTFUL, rê-spêkt'fûl, a. Ceremonious, full of outward civility.

RESPECTFULLY, rê-spêkt'fûl-ê, ad. With some degree of reverence.

RESPECTIVE, rê-spêkt'îv, a. 512. Particular, relating to particular persons or things, belonging to each; relative, not absolute.

RESPECTIVELY, rê-spêkt'îv-lê, ad. Particularly, as each belongs to each; relatively, not absolutely.

RESPERSION, rê-spêr'shûn, s. The act of sprinkling.

RESPIRATION, rê-spê-râ'shûn, s. The act of breathing; relief from toil.

To RESPIRE, rê-spîrê', v. n. To breathe; to catch breath; to rest, to take rest from toil.

RESPIRE, res'pîr, s. 140. Reprieve, suspension of a capital sentence; pause, interval.

To RESPITE, res'pîr, v. a. To relieve by a pause; to suspend, to delay.

RESPLENDENCE, res'plên'dênse, }
RESPLENDENCY, res'plên'dên-sé, } s.
Lustre, splendour.

RESPLENDENT, res'plên'dênt, a. Bright, having a beautiful lustre.

RESPLENDENTLY, res'plên'dênt-lê, ad. With lustre, brightly, splendidly.

To RESPOND, res'spônd', v. n. To answer; to correspond, to suit. Little used.

RESPONDENT, res'spônd'ênt, s. An answerer in a suit; one whose province, in a set disputation, is to refute objections.

RESPONSE, res'spônse', s. An answer; answer made by the congregation; reply to an objection in a formal disputation.

RESPONSIBILITY, res'spôn-sê-bil'itê-tê, s. State of being obliged to answer.

↪ This word is in none of our Dictionaries, but is so constantly in the mouths of our best parliamentary speakers, as to show its general reception; and, though there is no Latin substantive to derive it from, it is so much more smooth and voluble than our own responsibility, that we cannot wonder at the preference that is given to it.

RESPONSIBLE, res'spôn'sê-bl, a. Answerable, accountable; capable of discharging an obligation.

RESPONSIBLENESS, res'spôn'sê-bl-nês, s. State of being obliged or qualified to answer.

RESPONSION, res'spôn'shûn, s. The act of answering.

RESPONSIVE, res'spôn'siv, a. Answering, making answer; correspondent, suited to something else.

RESPONSORY, res'spôn'sûr-lê, a. 512. Containing answer.—See Domestic.

REST, rêst, s. Sleep, repose; the final sleep, the quietness of death; stillness, cessation of motion; quiet, peace, cessation from disturbance; cessation from bodily labour; support, that on which any thing leans or rests; place of repose; final hope; remainder, what remains.

REST, rêst, s. Others, those which remain.

To REST, rêst, v. n. To sleep, to slumber; to die; to be at quiet; to be without motion, to be still; to be fixed in any state or opinion; to cease from labour; to be satisfied, to acquiesce; to lean, to be supported; to be left, to remain.

To REST, rêst, v. a. To lay to rest; to place as on a support.

RESTAGNANT, res'stâg'nânt, a. Remaining without flow or motion.

To RESTAGNATE, res'stâg'nâte, v. n. To stand without flow.

RESTAGNATION, res'stâg'nâ'shûn, s. The state of standing without flow, course, or motion.

RESTAURATION, res'tâ-râ'shûn, s. The act of recovering to the former state.

↪ This word, though regularly formed from the Latin restauratio, is now entirely out of use, and restoration immoveably fixed in its place.

To RESTEM, res'stêm', v. a. To force back against the current.

RESTFUL, rêst'fûl, a. Quiet, being at rest.

RESTHARROW, rêst-hâr'rô, s. A plant.

RESTIFF, rêst'îf, a. Unwilling to stir, resolute against going forward, stubborn; being at rest, being less in motion.

↪ There is a deviation from propriety in the use of ti is word almost too vulgar to deserve notice, and that is denominating any thing stubborn or unruly rusty. Shakespeare, Swift, and Davenant, as we see in Johnson, have used the word rusty: but this is an evident corruption of the French word restif, and should be totally laid aside.

RESTIFNESS, rêst'îf-nês, s. Obstinate reluctance.

RESTINCTION, res'stingk'shûn, s. The act of extinguishing.

RESTITUTION, res-tê-tû'shûn, s. The act of restoring what is lost or taken away; the act of recovering its former state or posture.

RESTLESS, rêst'lês, a. Being without sleep; unquiet, without peace; inconstant, unsettled; not still, in continual motion.

RESTLESSLY, rêst'lês-lê, ad. Without rest, unquietly.

RESTLESSNESS, rêst'lês-nês, s. Want of sleep want of rest, inquietness; motion, agitation.

RESTORABLE, res-stô'râ-bl, a. That may be restored.

RESTORATION, res-tô-râ'shûn, s. The act of replacing in a former state; recovery.

RESTORATIVE, res-stô'râ-tiv, a. That has the power to recruit life.

RESTORATIVE, res-stô'râ-tiv, s. 512. A medicine that has the power of recruiting life.

To RESTORE, res-stôr', v. a. To give back what has been lost or taken away; to bring back; to retrieve; to bring back from degeneration, declension, or ruin, to its former state; to recover passages in books from corruption.

RESTORER, res-stô'râr, s. 98. One that restores.

To RESTRAIN, res-strân', v. a. To withhold, to keep in; to repress, to keep in awe; to hinder; to abridge; to limit, to confine.

RESTRAINABLE, res-strân'â-bl, a. Capable to be restrained.

RESTRAINEDLY, res-strân'êd-lê, ad. 365. With restraint, without latitude.

RESTRAINER, res-strân'nâr, s. 202. One that restrains, one that withholds.

RESTRAINT, res-sirânt', s. Abridgment of liberty; prohibition; limitation, restriction; repression, hinderance of will; act of withholding.

To RESTRICT, res-strîkt', v. a. To limit, to confine.

RESTRICTION, res-strîk'shûn, s. Confinement, limitation.

RESTRICTIVE, res-strîk'tiv, a. Expressing limitation; styptic, astringent.

RESTRICTIVELY, res-strîk'tiv-lê, ad. With limitation.

To RESTRINGE, res-strînje', v. a. To limit, to confine.

RESTRINGENT, res-strînj'ênt, s. That which hath the power of restraining.

RESTY, res'tê, a. Obstinate in standing still.—See Restif.

To RESUBLIME, res-sûb-lîme', v. a. To sublime another time.

To RESULT, res-zûit', v. n. 445. To fly back; to rise as a consequence; to be produced as the effect of causes jointly concurring; to arise as a conclusion from premises.

RESULT, res-zûit', s. Resilience, act of flying back; consequence, effect produced by the concurrence of co-operating causes; inference from premises; resolve, decision.

RESUMABLE, res-zû'mâ-bl, a. That may be taken back.

To RESUME, res-zûme', v. a. 445. To take back what has been given; to take back what has been taken away; to take again; to begin again what was broken off, as, to resume a discourse.

RESUMPTION, res-zûm'shûn, s. 412. The act of resuming.

RESUMPTIVE, res-zûm'tiv, a. Taking back.

RESUPINATION, res-sû-pê-nâ'shûn, s. 446. The act of lying on the back.

To RESURVEY, res-sûr-vâ', v. a. To review, to survey again.

RESURRECTION, rêz-ûr-rêk'shûn, s. 445. Revival from the dead, return from the grave.

To RESUSCITATE, rē-sūs-sē-tāte, v. a. 546.

To stir up anew, to revive.

RESUSCITATION, rē-sūs-sē-tā-shūn, s. The act of stirring up anew; the act of reviving, or state of being revived.

To RETAIL, rē-tāle, v. a. 202. To divide into small parcels; to sell in small quantities; to sell at second hand; to sell in broken parts.

↪ This verb and noun may be classed with those in Principles, No. 492: though the verb is sometimes accented on the first syllable, and the noun on the last.

RETAIL, rē-tāle, s. Sale by small quantities.

RETAILER, rē-tā-lūr, s. One who sells by small quantities.

To RETAIN, rē-tāne, v. a. 202. To keep, to keep in mind; to keep in pay, to hire.

RETAINER, rē-tā-nūr, s. 98. An adherent, a dependant, a hanger-on; the act of keeping dependant, or being in dependance.

To RETAKE, rē-tāke, v. a. To take again.

To RETALIATE, rē-tāl-ē-āte, v. a. 113. To return by giving like for like, to repay, to requite.

RETALIATION, rē-tāl-ē-ā-shūn, s. Requital, return of like for like.

To RETARD, rē-tārd, v. a. To hinder, to obstruct in swiftness of course; to delay, to put off.

To RETARD, rē-tārd, v. n. To stay back.

RETARDATION, rē-tār-dā-shūn, s. 530. Hindrance, the act of delaying.

RETARDER, rē-tārd-ār, s. 98. Hinderer, obstructor.

To RETCH, rētsh, or rētsh, v. n. To force up something from the stomach.

↪ This word is derived from the same Saxon original as the verb reach, and seems to signify the same action; the one implying the extension of the arm; and the other, of the throat or lungs. No good reason, therefore, appears either for spelling or pronouncing them differently; and though Dr. Johnson has made a distinction in the orthography, the pronunciation of both is generally the same.—See Bowl.

RETCHESS, rētsh-lēs, a. Careless. Not used.

RETECTION, rē-tēk-shūn, s. The act of discovering to the view.

RETENTION, rē-tēn-shūn, s. The act of retaining; memory; limitation; custody, confinement, restraint.

RETENTIVE, rē-tēn-tiv, a. Having the power of retention; having memory.

RETENTIVENESS, rē-tēn-tiv-nēs, s. Having the quality of retention.

RETICENCE, rēt-tē-sēnse, s. Concealment by silence.

RETICLE, rēt-tē-kl, s. 405. A small net.

RETICULAR, rē-tik-ū-lār, a. Having the form of a small net.

RETICULATED, rē-tik-ū-lā-tēd, a. Made of network.

RETIFORM, rēt-tē-fōrm, a. Having the form of a net.

RETINA, rēt-tē-nā, s. The optic nerve which receives the image of the object in vision.

RETINUE, iēt-tē-nū, or rēt-tim-nū, s. A number attending upon a principal person, a tram.

↪ This word was formerly always accented on the second syllable; but the antepenultimate accent, to which our language is so prone in simples of three syllables, has so generally obtained as to make it doubtful to which side the best usage inclines. Dr. Johnson, Sheridan, Ash, Kenrick, Nares, Bailey, and Fenning, accent the second syllable; and Buchanan, W. Johnston, Perry, Barclay, and Entick, the first. Scott accents both, but prefers the first. In this case, then, analogy ought to decide for placing the accent on the first syllable. See Principles, No. 535, and the word Revenue.

To RETIRE, rē-tīre, v. n. To retreat, to withdraw, to go to a place of privacy; to retreat from danger; to go from a publick station; to go off from company.

To RETIRE, rē-tīre, v. a. To withdraw, to take away.

RETIRE, rē-tīre, s. Retreat, retirement. Not in use.

RETIRED, rē-tīrd, part. a. Secret, private.

RETIREDNESS, rē-tīrd-nēs, s. Solitude, privacy, secrecy.

RETIREMENT, rē-tīre-mēnt, s. Private abode, secret habitation; private way of life; act of withdrawing.

RETOLD, rē-tōld, Part. pass. of Retell. Related or told again.

To RETORT, rē-tōrt, v. a. To throw back; to return any argument, censure, or incivility; to curve back.

RETORT, rē-tōrt, s. A censure or incivility returned; a chymical glass vessel with a bent neck to which the receiver is fitted.

REORTER, rē-tōrt-ār, s. 98. One that retorts.

RETORTION, rē-tōrt-shūn, s. The act of retorting.

To RETOSS, rē-tōs, v. a. To toss back.

To RETOUCH, rē-tūtsh, v. a. To improve by new touches.

To RETRACE, rē-trāse, v. a. To trace back.

To RETRACT, rē-trākt, v. a. To recall, to recant.

To RETRENCH, rē-trēnsh, v. a. To cut off, to pare away; to confine.

To RETRENCH, rē-trēnsh, v. n. To live with less magnificence or elegance.

RETRENCIEMENT, rē-trēnsh-mēnt, s. The act of lopping away.

To RETRIBUTE, rē-trīb-ūte, v. a. To pay back, to make repayment of.

↪ I have differed from Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, and almost all our orthoëpists, in giving the accent to the second syllable of this word in preference to the first. But while the verbs attribute, contribute, and distribute, have the penultimate accent, it seems absurd not to give retribute the same.

RETRIBUTION, rēt-trē-bū-shūn, s. Repayment, return accommodated to the action.

RETRIBUTIVE, rē-trīb-ū-tiv, 512. } a.

RETRIBUTORY, rē-trīb-ū-tūr-ē, } a.

Repaying, making repayment.

RETRIEVABLE, rē-trēv-ā-bl, a. That may be retrieved.

To RETRIEVE, rē-trēv, v. a. 275. To recover, to restore; to repair; to regain; to recall, to bring back.

RETROCESSION, rēt-trō-sēs-shūn, s. 530. The act of going back.

REVELLER, r^e-v^el^e-^ur, s. One who feasts with noisy jollity.

REVELRY, r^e-v^el^e-r^e, s. Loose jollity, festive mirth.

To REVENGE, r^e-v^enj^e, v. a. To return an injury; to vindicate by punishment of an enemy; to weak one's wrongs on him that inflicted them.

REVENGE, r^e-v^enj^e, s. 74. Return of an injury.

REVENGEFUL, r^e-v^enj^e-f^ul, a. Vindictive, full of vengeance.

REVENGEFULLY, r^e-v^enj^e-f^ul-l^e, ad. Vindictively.

REVENGER, r^e-v^enj^e-^ur, s. 98. One who revenges.

REVENGEMENT, r^e-v^enj^e-m^ent, s. Vengeance, return of an injury.

REVENUE, r^e-v^en^u, or r^e-v^en^u, s. Income, annual profits received from lands or other funds.

☞ This word seems as nearly balanced between the accent on the first and second syllable as possible; but as it is of the same form and origin as avenue and retinue, it ought to follow the same fortune. Retinue seems to have been long inclining to accent the first syllable, and avenue has decidedly done so, since Dr. Watts observed that it was sometimes accented on the second; and by this retrocession of accent, as it may be called, we may easily foresee that these three words will uniformly yield to the antepenultimate accent, the favourite accent of our language, conformably to the general rule, which accents simples of three syllables upon the first. Dr. Johnson, Mr. Nares, and Bailey, are for the accent on the second syllable; but Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Buchanan, W. Johnston, Perry, Barclay, Fenning, and Entick, accent the first. Mr. Sheridan gives both, but places the antepenultimate accent first. 503.—See Conversant, and Retinue.

REVERB, r^e-v^erb, v. a. To strike against, to reverb^{er}ate. Not in use.

REVERBERANT, r^e-v^er^u-b^er^u-^unt, a. Resounding, beating back.

REVERTIBLE, r^e-v^er^t-^e-bl, a. Returnable.

REVERY, r^e-v^erⁱ-^e, s. Loose musing, irregular thought.

☞ This word seems to have been some years floating between the accent on the first and last syllable, but to have settled at last on the former. It may still, however, be reckoned among those words, which, if occasion require, admit of either. See Principles, No. 228. It may, perhaps, be necessary to observe, that some Lexicographers have written this word reverie instead of revery, and that while it is thus written we may place the accent either on the first or last syllable; but if we place the accent on the last of revery, and pronounce the y like e, there arises an irregularity which forbids it; for y, with the accent on it, is never so pronounced. Dr. Johnson's orthography, therefore, with y in the last syllable, and Mr. Sheridan's accent on the first, seem to be the most correct mode of writing and pronouncing this word.

A view of the different orthography and accentuation of this word may contribute to confirm that which I have chosen:

Revery ,	Sheridan, W. Johnston, Barclay.
Revery ,	Johnson's quarto, Entick.
Reverie ,	Buchanan.
Revery ,	Kenrick, Johnson's folio.
Reveries ,	Bailey.
Reverie ,	Barclay, Fenning, Entick.
Reverie ,	Perry.

RHOMB, rômb! a. A parallelogram or quadrangular figure having its four sides equal and consisting of parallel lines, with two opposite angles acute, and two obtuse.

→ I have here differed from Mr. Sheridan, and adopted that sound of the vowel in this word which is given to it by Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Perry. This I do not only suppose to be the general pronunciation, but find it written rhumb by Dr. Ash, Buchanan, and Barclay. This is the way I find it spelled by an old English author in Collectanea Curiosa, vol. 1. page 232. "And so that opportunity of curbing the "Puritan being lost, the course which was afterwards "steered proved to be a false rhumb, and did rather "accelerate than prevent the mischief." But when this word is given us in its Latin form rhombus, the o ought to have the same sound as in comedy.—See Principes, No. 347.

RHOMBRICK, rômb-îk! a. Shaped like a rhomb.

RHOMBOID, rômb-ôîd! s. A figure approaching to a rhomb.

RIDGY, rîd²jé, a. Rising in a ridge.

RIDICULE, rîd²é²kúle, s. Wit of that species which provokes laughter.

↳ This word is frequently mispronounced by sounding the first syllable like the adjective red; an inaccuracy which cannot be too carefully avoided.

I am of the same opinion as Mr. Nares, that this word was anciently accented on the last syllable as derived from the French ridicule, and not the Latin ridiculus; but this accent being found contrary to the Latin analogy, 503, shifted to the first syllable; a transition which, in words of three syllables, is the easiest thing in the world.—See Principles, No. 524.

To RIDICULE, rîd²é²kúle, v. a. To expose to laughter, to treat with contemptuous merriment.

RIDICULOUS, ré²dík²kú²lús, a. Worthy of laughter, exciting contemptuous merriment.

RISE, rîse, s. 437. 560. The act of rising; elevated place; appearance of the sun in the east; increase of price; beginning, original; elevation, increase of sound.

↪ This word very properly takes the pure sound of s to distinguish it from the verb, but does not adhere to this distinction so involuntarily as the nouns use, excuse, &c. for we sometimes hear "the Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire," "the rise and fall of provisions," &c. with the s like z. The pure s, however, is more agreeable to analogy, and ought to be scrupulously preserved in these places by all correct speakers.—See Principles, No. 437. 499.

RISER, rî²-zûr, s. 98. One that rises.

RISIBILITY, rîz-ê-bîl²-ê-tê, s. The quality of laughing.

ROMAN, ról-mán, a. 88. Belonging to Rome.

ROME, róm, s. The capital city of Italy, supposed to have been founded by Romulus, and once the mistress of the world.

☞ The o in this word seems irrevocably fixed in the English sound of that letter in more, prove, &c. Pope, indeed, rhymes it with dome,

"Thus when we view some well-proportion'd dome,
"The world's just wonder, and ev'n thine, O Rome!"

But, as Mr. Nares observes, it is most probable that he pronounced this word as if written doom, as he rhymes Rome with doom afterwards in the same poem.

"From the same foes at last both felt their doom;

"And the same age saw learning fall and Rome!"

Essay on Criticism, v. 685.

The truth is, nothing certain can be concluded from the rhyming of poets. It may serve to confirm an established usage, but can never direct us where usage is various and uncertain. But the pun which Shakespeare puts into the mouth of Cassius in Julius Cæsar decidedly shows what was the pronunciation of this word in his time:

"Now it is Rome, indeed, and room enough,

"When there is in it but one only naan!"

And the Grammar in Queen Anne's time, recommended by Steele, says, the city Rome is pronounced like Room; and Dr. Jones, in his Spelling Dictionary, 1704, gives it the same sound.

↳ Upon a more accurate observation of the best usage, I must give the preference to the first sound of this word, notwithstanding its coincidence in sound with another word of a different meaning; the fewer French sounds of this diphthong we have in our language, the better; nor does there appear any necessity for retaining the final e.—See Bowl. Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Smith make a difference between rou, a rabble, and route, a road; Mr. Scott gives both sounds, but seems to prefer the first; W. Johnston, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Perry, pronounce both alike, and with the first sound ROUTINE, rôû'tên', s. 112.

↳ This is a French word adopted to express any practice, proceeding in the same regular way, without any alteration according to circumstances.

 This word, with sacrifice, sacrilege, and sacristy, is sometimes pronounced with the a in the first syllable long, as in sacred; but this is contrary to one of the clearest analogies in the language, which is that the antepenultimate accent in simples, not followed by a diphthong, always shortens the vowel it falls upon. See Principles, No. 503.
 Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Kenrick, Perry, and Entick, pronounce these words as I have marked them.

SAID, séd, 203. 222. Pret. and part. pass. of Say. Aforesaid; declared, showed.

↳ This word, with paid and laid, are a scandal to our orthography. It appeared so to Cooke, the translator of Hesiod, who spelt them regularly sayed, payed, and layed. "Perseus is sayed to have been sent by Pallas to slay Medusa," &c. page 156.

SAIK, sá'ík, s. A Turkish vessel proper for the carriage of merchandise.

SAIL, sále, s. 202. The expanded sheet which catches the wind and carries on the vessel through the water; wings; a ship, a vessel; Sail is a collective word, noting the number of ships; to strike Sail, to lower the sail, a proverbial phrase for abating of pomp or superiority.

To SAIL, sále, v. n. To be moved by the wind with sails; to pass by sea; to swim; to pass smoothly along.

To SALE, sále, v. a. To pass by means of sails; to fly through.

SAILER, } sál-lúr, s. 166.

A seaman, one who practises or understands navigation.

↳ The first of these words is generally applied to the ship, and the second to the mariner. Whatever may be the reason for this distinction to the eye, the ear is quite insensible of it, and the ship and the man are both pronounced alike. See Principles, No. 416.

SAILYARD, sále-yárd, s. The pole on which the sail is extended.

SAINFOIN, sán-fóin, s. A kind of herb.

SAINT, sánt, s. 202. A person eminent for piety and virtue.

SALACITY, sá-lás-se-té, s. Lust, lechery.

SALAD, sál'lád, s. Food of raw herbs.

↳ This word is often pronounced as if written sallet the true pronunciation is, however, more in use and less pedantic than that of asparagus and cucumber would be.

SALAMANDER, sál'lá-mán-dúr, s. An animal supposed to live in the fire.

SALAMANDRINE, sál'lá-mán-drín, a. 140. Resembling a salamander.

SALEWORK, sále-würk, s. Works for sale, work carelessly done.

SALIENT, sál'lé-ént, a. 113. Leaping, bounding; beating, panting, springing or shooting with a quick motion.

SALINE, sá-líne, or sál'líne, a. Consisting of salt.

↳ As this word is derived from the Latin salinus by dropping a syllable, the accent ought, according to the general rule of formation, 503, to remove to the first. This accentuation, however, is adopted only by Dr. Johnson, Buchanan, and Bailey; as Sheridan, Kenrick, Ash, Nares, W. Johnston, Scott, Perry, Barclay, Fenning, Entick, and Smith, accent the second syllable.

SALINOUS, sá-ll-nús, a. Consisting of salt, constituting salt.

↳ Dr. Johnson, in his folio Dictionary, accents this word on the first syllable, in which he is followed by his publishers in the quarto. but as this word may be easily derived from the Latin word salinus, and with the same number of syllables, it ought to be accented on the second. 503, e.

SALIVA, sá-ll-vá, s. 503, b. Every thing that is spit up, but it more strictly signifies that juice which is separated by the glands called salival.

↳ As this word is a perfect Latin word, all our Dictionaries very properly accent it on the second syllable, 503. But salival, which is a formative of our own, has no such title to the penultimate accent: this pronunciation, however, is adopted by Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Scott, Barclay, Fenning, Entick, and Johnson's quarto; but Mr. Perry and Dr. Johnson's folio place the accent on the first syllable, and, in my opinion, more correctly.

SALIVAL, sál'lé-vál, or sá-ll'vál, } a.

SALIVARY, sál'lé-vá-ré, }
Relating to spittle.—See Saliva.

To SALIVATE, sál'lé-váte, v. a. To purge by the salival glands.

SALIVATION, sál'lé-vá'shún, s. A method of cure much practised in venereal cases.

SALIVOUS, sá-ll'vús, or sál'lé-vús, a. Consisting of spittle, having the nature of spittle.—See Principles, No. 103, p.

↳ As this word has somewhat more of a Latin aspect than salival, and is probably derived from salivus, the learnedly polite, or the politely learned, snatch at the shadow of Latin quantity to distinguish themselves from mere English speakers. Hence in all the words of this termination they preserve the penultimate long, and place the accent on it, and thus we are obliged to do the same in this word under pain of appearing illiterate. This penalty, however, Dr. Ash and Mr. Perry have incurred,

↪ 559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fät 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pline 105, pin 107—nô 162, môte 164, by placing the accent on the first syllable; but Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Barclay, Fenning, and Entick, follow the learned majority, though evidently wrong.

SALVABILITY, sâl-vâ-bîl-ê-tê, s. Possibility of being received to everlasting life.

SALVABLE, sâl-vâ-bl, a. 405. Possible to be saved.

SALVAGE, sâl-vidje, s. 90. A recompense allowed to those who have assisted in saving goods or merchandise from a wreck.

SALVATION, sâl-vâ-shûn, s. Preservation from eternal death, reception to the happiness of heaven.

SALVATORY, sâl-vâ-tûr-ê, s. 512. A place where any thing is preserved.

SALUBRIOUS, sâ-lû-brê-ûs, a. Wholesome, healthful, promoting health.

SALUBRITY, sâ-lû-brê-tê, s. Wholesomeness, healthfulness.

SALVE, sâlv, s. 78. A glutinous matter applied to wounds and hurts, an emplaster; help, remedy.

↪ Dr. Johnson tells us, that this word is originally and properly salv; which having salves in the plural, the singular, in time, was borrowed from it: sealf, Saxon, undoubtedly from salvus, Latin. There is some diversity among our orthoëpists about the l in this word and its verb. Mr. Sheridan marks it to be pronounced; Mr. Smith, W. Johnston, and Barclay, make it mute; Mr. Scott and Mr. Perry give it both ways; and Mr. Nares says it is mute in the noun, but sounded in the verb. The mute l is certainly countenanced in this word by calve and halve; but as they are very irregular, and are the only words where the l is silent in this situation, for valve, delve, solve, &c. have the l pronounced; and as this word is of Latin original, the l ought certainly to be preserved in both words: for to have the same word sounded differently, to signify different things, is a defect in language that ought as much as possible to be avoided.—See Bowl and Fault.

To SALVE, sâlv, v. a. To cure with medicaments applied; to help, to remedy; to help or save by a salvo, an excuse, or reservation.

SALVER, sâl-vûr, s. 98. A plate on which any thing is presented.

SALVO, sâl'vô, s. An exception, a reservation, an excuse.—See Salvation.

SALUTARINESS, sâl-lû-tâ-rê-nês, s. Wholesomeness, quality of contributing to health or safety.

SALUTARY, sâl-lû-tâ-rê, a. Wholesome, healthful, safe, advantageous, contributing to health or safety.

SALUTATION, sâl-lû-tâ-shûn, s. The act or style of saluting; greeting.

To SALUTE, sâ-lûte, v. a. To greet, to hail; to kiss.

SALUTE, sâ-lûte, s. Salutation, greeting; a kiss.

SALUTER, sâ-lû-tûr, s. 98. One who salutes.

SALUTIFEROUS, sâl-lû-tî-fêr-ûs, a. Healthy, bringing health.

SAME, sâme, a. Identical, being of the like kind, sort, or degree; mentioned before.

SAMENESS, sâme-nês, s. Identity.

SAMLET, sâni-lêt, s. A little salmon.

SAMPHIRE, sâm-ûr, s. 140. A plant preserved in pickle.

SAMPLE, sâmp'l, s. 405. A specimen, a part shown, that judgment may be made of the whole.

SAMPLER, sâmp-pl-ûr, s. 98. A pattern of work; a piece worked by young girls for improvement.

SANABLE, sân-nâ-bl, a. 53E. Curable, susceptible of remedy, remediable.

↪ Mr. Nares, Buchanan, and W. Johnston, pronounce the a in the first syllable of this word long; but Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Entick, more properly, short. Buchanan only makes the same a in sanative long; but Mr. Sheridan, Scott, W. Johnston, Perry, and Entick, short. Mr. Sheridan and Buchanan, are the only orthoëpists from whom we can gather the sound of this vowel in insanable, which the latter marks long, and the former short as it ought to be, from the shortening power of the antepenultimate accent.—See Granary.

SANATION, sâ-nâ-shûn, s. The act of curing.

SANATIVE, sân-nâ-tîv, a. 158. Powerful to cure, healing.—See Donative.

SANATIVENESS, sân-nâ-tîv-itês, s. Power to cure.

SANCTIFICATION, sângk-tê-fê-kâ-shûn, s. 408. The state of being freed, or act of giving freedom from the dominion of sin for the time to come; the act of making holy, consecration.

To SANCTIFY, sângk-tê-fî, v. a. To free from the power of sin for the time to come; to make holy to make a means of holiness; to make free from guilt, to secure from violation.

SANCTIMONIOUS, sângk-tê-mô-nê-ûs, a. Saintly, having the appearance of sanctity.

SANCTIMONY, sângk-tê-mô-nê, s. Holiness, scrupulous austerity, appearance of holiness.

SANCTION, sângk-shûn, s. 408. The act of confirmation which gives to any thing its obligatory power, ratification; a law, a decree ratified.

SANCTITUDE, sângk'tê-tûde, s. Holiness, goodness, saintliness.

SANCTITY, sângk'tê-tê, s. Holiness, goodness, godliness; saint, holy being.

To SANCTUARISE, sângk'tshû-â-rîze, v. n. To shelter by means of sacred privileges.

SANCTUARY, sângk'tshû-â-rê, s. 463. A holy place, holy ground; a place of protection, a sacred asylum; shelter, protection.

SAND, sând, s. Particles of stone not conjoined, or stone broken to powder; barren country covered with sands.

SANDAL, sând-dâl, s. 88. A loose shoe.

SANDARACH, or SANDARAC, sând-dâ-râk, s. A mineral resembling red arsenic; the gum of the juniper tree.

SANDBLIND, sând-bilnd, a. Having a defect in the eyes, by which small particles appear before them.

SANDBOX-TREE, sând-bôks-trêe, s. A plant.

SANDED, sând-dêd, a. Covered with sand, barren; marked with small spots, variegated with dusky specks.

SANDISH, sând'îsh, a. Approaching to the nature of sand, loose, not close, not compact.

SANDSTONE, sând-stone, s. Stone of a loose and friable kind.

SANDY, sând'ê, a. Abounding with sand, full of sand; consisting of sand, unsolid.

SANE, sâne, a. Sound, healthy.

SANG, sâng. The pret. of Sing.

SANGUIFEROUS, sâng-gwîf-êr-ûs, a. Conveying blood.

SANGUIFICATION, sâng-gwê-tê-kâ'shûn, s. The production of blood; the conversion of the chyle into blood.

SANGUIFIER, sâng-gwê-fl-ûr, s. Producer of blood.

To SANGUIFY, sâng-gwê-fl, v. n. 340. To produce blood.

SANGUINARY, sâng-gwê-nâ-rê, a. Cruel, bloody, murderous.

SANGUINE, sâng-gwîn, a. 340. Red, having the colour of blood; abounding with blood more than any other humour, cheerful; warm, ardent, confident.

SAT, sât. The pret. of Sit.

SATAN, sâ'tân, or sât'tân, s. The prince of hell, any wicked spirit.

↳ This word is frequently pronounced as if written Sattan; but making the first syllable long is so agreeable to analogy that it ought to be indulged wherever custom will permit, and particularly in proper names. Cato, Plato, &c. have now universally the penultimate a long and slender; and no good reason can be given why the word in question should not join this class: if the short quantity of the a in the original be alledged, for an answer to this see Principles, No. 544, and the word Sature. Mr. Nares and Buchanan only adopt the second sound; but Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, Entick, and, if we may judge by the position of the accent, Dr. Ash and Bailey, the first.—See The Key to the Classical Pronunciation of Greek, Latin, and Scripture Proper Names, under the word.

SATANICAL, sâ-tân'ê-kâl, } a.

SATANICK, sâ-tân'nik, 509. }
Devilish, infernal.

→ 559. Fâte 73, fâr 77, fâll 83, fât 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pline 105, pîn 107—nô 162, môve 164,

SATCHEL, sâtsh'îl, s. 99. A little bag used by school-boys.

To SATE, sâte, v. a. To satiate, to glut, to pall, to feed beyond natural desire.

SATELLITE, sât'têl-lîte, s. 155. A small planet revolving round a larger.

→ Pope has, by the license of his art, accented the plural of this word upon the second syllable, and, like the Latin plural, has given it four syllables:

"Or ask of yonder argent fields above,
"Why Jove's Satellites are less than Jove."

Essay on Man.

This, however, is only pardonable in poetry, and, it may be added, in good poetry.—See Antipodes and Millepedes.

SATELLITIOUS, sât'têl-lîsh'ûs, a. Consisting of satellites.

To SATIATE, sâ'shê-âte, v. a. To satisfy, to fill; to glut, to pall; to gratify desire; to saturate, to impregnate with as much as can be contained or imbibed.

SATIATE, sâ'shê-âte, a. 91. Glutted, full to satiety.

SATIETY, sâ-îl'b-tê, s. 460. Fulness beyond desire or pleasure, more than enough, state of being palled.

→ The sound of the second syllable of this word has been grossly mistaken by the generality of speakers; nor is it much to be wondered at. Ti, with the accent on it, succeeded by a vowel, is a very uncommon predicament for an English syllable to be under; and therefore it is not surprising that it has been almost universally confounded with an apparently similar, but really different, assemblage of accent, vowels, and consonants. So accustomed is the ear to the aspirated sound of t, when followed by two vowels, that whenever these appear we are apt to annex the very same sound to that letter, without attending to an essential circumstance in this word, which distinguishes it from every other in the language. There is no English word of exactly the same form with satiety, and therefore it cannot, like most other words, be tried by its peers; but analogy, that grand resource of reason, will as clearly determine, in this case, as if the most positive evidence were produced.

In the first place, then, the sound commonly given to the second syllable of this word, which is that of the first of si-lence, as if written sa-si-e-ty, is never found annexed to the same letters throughout the whole language. T, when succeeded by two vowels, in every instance but the word in question, sounds exactly like sh; thus satiare, expatiare, &c. are pronounced as if written sa-she-ate, ex-pa-she-ate, &c. and not sa-se-ate, ex-pa-se-ate, &c. and therefore if the t must be aspirated in this word, it ought at least to assume that aspiration which is found among similar assemblages of letters, and instead of sa-si-e-ty, it ought to be sounded sa-shi-ety: in this mode of pronunciation a greater parity might be pleaded; nor should we introduce a new aspiration to reproach our language with needless irregularity. But if we once cast an eye on those conditions, on which we give an aspirated sound to the dentals, 26, we shall find both these methods of pronouncing this word equally remote from analogy. In almost every termination where the consonants, t, d, c, and s, precede the vowels ea, ia, ie, io, &c. as in martial, soldier, suspicion, confusion, anxious, prescience, &c. the accent is on the syllable immediately before these consonants, and they all assume the aspiration; but in Ægypticum, elephantiasis, hendiadis, society, anxiety, science, &c. the accent is immediately after these consonants, and the t, d, c, and s, are pronounced as free from aspiration as the same letters in tiar, diet, cion, Ixion, &c. the position of the accent makes the whole difference. But if analogy in our own language were silent, the uniform pronunciation of words from the learned languages, where these letters occur, would be sufficient to decide the dispute. Thus in elephantiasis, Miltiades, satiates, &c. the antepenultimate syllable ti is always pronounced like the English noun tie; nor should we dream of giving ti the aspirated sound in these words, though there would be exactly the same reason for it as in satiety: for, except in very few instances, as we pronounce Latin in the analogy of our own language, no reason can be given that we should pronounce the antepenultimate syllable in satiates one way, and that in satiety another.

I should have thought my time thrown away in so minute an investigation of the pronunciation of this word, if I had not found the best judges disagree about it. That Mr. Sheridan supposed it ought to be pronounced sa-ti-e-ty, is evident from his giving this word as an instance of the various sounds of t, and telling us that here it sounds s. Mr. Garrick, whom I consulted on this word, told me, if there were any rules for pronunciation, I was certainly right in mine; but that he and his literary acquaintance pronounced in the other manner. Dr. Johnson likewise thought I was right, but that the greater number of speakers were against me; and Dr. Lowth told me, he was clearly of my opinion, but that he could get nobody to follow him. I was much flattered to find my sentiments confirmed by so great a judge, and much more flattered when I found my reasons were entirely new to him.

But, notwithstanding the tide of opinion was some years ago so much against me, I have since had the pleasure of finding some of the most judicious philologists on my side. Mr. Elphinston, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Perry, mark the word as I have done; and Mr. Nares is of opinion it ought to be so pronounced, though for a reason very different from those I have produced, namely, in order to keep it as distinct as may be from the word society. While Mr. Fry frankly owns, it is very difficult to determine the proper pronunciation of this word.

Thus I have ventured to decide where "Doctors disagree," and have been induced to spend so much time on the correction of this word, as the improper pronunciation of it does not, as in most other cases, proceed from an evident caprice of custom, as in busy and bury, or from a desire of drawing nearer to the original language, but from an absolute mistake of the principles on which we pronounce our own.

SATIN, sât'tîn, s. A soft, close, and shining silk.

SATIRE, sât'tûr, sât'ûr, sât'tire, or sât'êre, s.

A poem in which wickedness or folly are censured.

→ The first mode of pronouncing this word is adopted by Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Ash, and Mr. Smith. The short quantity of the first vowel is adopted by Mr. Nares, Mr. Elphinston, Buchanan, and Enrick; but the quantity of the second syllable they have not marked. The third is adopted by Mr. Perry and Dr. Kenrick; and for the fourth we have no authorities.

But though the first mode of pronouncing this word is the most general, and the most agreeable to an English ear, the second seems to be that which is most favored by the learned; because, say they, the first syllable in the Latin satira is short. But if this reasoning were to hold good, we ought to pronounce the first syllable of silence, local, label, libel, locust, paper, many others short, because silentium, localis, labelium, libellus, locusta, papyrus, &c. have all the first syllables short in Latin. But, to furnish the learned with an argument which perhaps may not immediately occur to them, it may be said, that in the instances I have adduced, none of the Latin words have the initial syllable accented as well as short, which is the case with the word satira: but it may be answered, if we were to follow the quantity of the Latin accented vowel, we must pronounce fatid, minic, frigid, squalid, conic, resin, credit, spirit, and lily, with the first vowel long, because it is the case in the Latin words fatidus, mimicus, frigidus, squalidas, comicus, resina, creditus, spiritus, and lilium.

The only shadow of an argument therefore that remains is, that though we do not adopt the Latin quantity of the accented antepenultimate vowel when it is long, except the vowel u, 507, 508, 509, we do when it is short. For though we have many instances where an English word of two syllables has the first short, though derived from a Latin word where the first two syllables are long; as civil, legate, solemn, &c. from civilis, legatus, solemnis, &c. yet we have no instance in the language where a word of three syllables in Latin with the first two vowels short, becomes an English dissyllable with the first syllable long. Hence the shortness of the first syllables of platane, zephyr, atom, &c. from platanus, zephyrus, atomus, &c. which are short, not only from the custom of carrying the short sound we give to the Latin antepenultimate vowel into the penultimate of the English word derived from it, but from the affectation of shortening the initial vowel, which this custom has introduced, in order to give our pronunciation a Latin air, and furnish us with an opportunity of showing our learning by appealing to Latin quantity; which, when applied to English, is so vague and uncertain, as to put us out of all fear of detection if we happen to be wrong. The absurd custom, therefore, of shortening our vowels, ought to be discountenanced as much as possible, since it is supported by such weak and desultory arguments; and our own analogy in this, as well as in similar words, ought to be preferred to such a shadow of analogy to the quantity of the Latin language, as I have charitably afforded to those who are ignorant of it. See Principles, No. 544.

With respect to the quantity of the last syllable, though custom seems to have decided it in this form, it is not so certain in other words of a similar form. To which we may add, that although poets often bend the rhyme to their verse, when they cannot bring their verse to the rhyme, yet where custom is equivocal, their example is certainly of some weight. In this view we may look upon the couplet in Pope's Essay on Criticism,

"Leave dangerous truths to unsuccessful satires;
"And flattery to fulsome dedicators."

SATURDAY, sát-túr-dé, s. 223. The last day of the week.

SATURITY, sát-túr-ré-té, s. Fulness, the state of being saturated, repletion.

SATURN, sát-túr-n, or sát-túr-n, s. The remotest planet of the solar system; in Chymistry, lead.

\hookrightarrow This was supposed to be the remotest planet when Dr. Johnson wrote his Dictionary; but Mr. Herschel has since discovered a planet still more remote, which will undoubtedly be called hereafter by his own name. The first pronunciation of this word is not the most general, but by far the most analogical; and for the same reason as in Satan: but there is an additional reason in this word, which will weigh greatly with the learned, and that is, the a is long in the original. Mr. Elphinston, Dr. Kenrick, Perry, and Entick, adopted the second pronunciation of this word; and Mr. Sheridan, Scott, Buchanan, W. Johnston, and, if we may guess by the position of the accent, Dr. Ash and Bailey, the first.

SATURNINE, sát-túr-níne, a. 143. Gloomy, melancholy, severe of temper.

SATURNIAN, sát-túr-né-án, a. Happy, golden.

SATYR, sát-túr, or sát-túr, s. A sylvan god.

SAVAGE, sáv-vídje, a. 90. Wild, uncultivated; uncivilized, barbarous.

SAVAGE, sáv-vídje, s. A man untaught and uncivilized, a barbarian.

SAVAGELY, sáv-vídje-lé, ad. Barbarously, cruelly.

SAVAGENESS, sáv-vídje-nés, s. Barbarousness, cruelty, wildness.

SAVAGERY, sáv-víd-jér-ré, s. Cruelty, barbarity; wild growth.

SAVANNA, sá-ván-ná, s. 92. An open meadow without wood.

SAUCE, sáwse, s. 218. Something eaten with food to improve its taste; to serve one the same Sauce, a vulgar phrase, to retaliate one injury with another.

To SAUCE, sáwse, v. a. To accompany meat with something of higher relish; to gratify with rich tastes to intermix, or accompany with any thing good, or, ironically, with any thing bad.

SAUCEBOX, sáwse-búks, s. An impertinent or petulant fellow.

SAUCEPAN, sáwse-pán, s. A small skillet with a long handle, in which sauce or small things are boiled.

SAUCER, sáw-súr, s. 98. 218. A small pan or platter on which sauce is set on the table; a piece or platter of china, into which a tea-cup is set.

SAUCILY, sáw-sé-lé, ad. Impudently, impertinently, petulantly.

SAUCINESS, sáw-sé-nés, s. Impudence, petulance, impertinence.

SAUCY, sáw-sé, a. 218. Pert, petulant, insolent.

\hookrightarrow The regular sound of this diphthong must be carefully preserved, as the Italian sound of a given to it in this word, and in sauce, saucer, daughter, &c. is only heard among the vulgar.

To SAVE, sáve, v. a. To preserve from danger or destruction; to preserve finally from eternal death; not to spend, to hinder from being spent; to reserve or lay by; to spare, to excuse; to salvage.

To SAVE, sáve, v. n. To be cheap.

SAVE, sáve, ad. Except, not including.

SAVEALL, sáve-áll, s. 406. A small pan inserted into a candlestick to save the ends of candles.

SAVER, sáv-vúr, s. 98. Preserver, rescuer; one who escapes loss, though without gain; one who lays up and grows rich.

SAVING, sáv-íng, ad. With exception in favour of.

SAVING, sáv-íng, s. Escape of expense, somewhat preserved from being spent, exception in favour.

SAVINGLY, sáv-íng-lé, ad. With parsimony.

SAVINGNESS, sáv-íng-nés, s. Parsimony, frugality; tendency to promote eternal salvation.

SAVIOUR, sáve-vúr, s. 113. Redeemer, he that has saved mankind from eternal death.

To SAUNTER, sán-túr, or sáwn-túr, v. n. To wander about idly, to loiter, to linger.

\hookrightarrow The first mode of pronouncing this word is the more agreeable to analogy, if not in the most general use; but where use has formed so clear a rule as in words of this form, it is wrong not to follow it. See Principles, No. 514.

Mr. Elphinston, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Scott, are for the first pronunciation; and Mr. Sheridan and W. Johnston for the last. Mr. Perry gives both; but, by placing them as I have done, seems to give the preference to the first.

SAVORY, sáv-vúr-é, s. 314. A plant.

SAVOUR, sáv-vúr, s. A scent, odour; taste, power of affecting the palate.—See Honour.

To SAVOUR, sáv-vúr, v. n. To have any particular smell or taste; to betoken, to have an appearance or taste of something.

To SAVOUR, sáv-vúr, v. a. To like; to exhibit taste of.

SAVOURILY, sáv-vúr-é-lé, ad. With gust, with appetite; with a pleasing relish.

SAVOURINESS, sáv-vúr-é-nés, s. Taste pleasing and piquant; pleasing smell.

SAVOURY, sáv-vúr-é, a. Pleasing to the smell, piquant to the taste.

SAVOY, sá-vóé, s. A sort of colewort.

↪ 559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fät 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pline 105, pin 107—nô 162, môve 164,

SAUSAGE, sâw'sidje, or sâs'sidje, s. A roll or ball made commonly of pork or veal minced very small, with salt and spice.

↪ This word is pronounced in the first manner by correct, and in the second, by vulgar speakers. Among this number, however, I do not reckon Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Scott, who adopt it; but, in my opinion, Dr. Kenrick and Mr. Perry, who prefer the first, are not only more agreeable to rule, but to the best usage. In this opinion I am confirmed by Mr. Nares, who says it is commonly pronounced in the second manner. See Principles, No. 218.

SAW, sâw, 219. The pret. of See.

SAW, sâw, s. A dentated instrument by the attrition of which wood or metal is cut; a saying, and a sentence, a proverb.

To SAW, sâw, v. a. Part. Sawed and Sawn. To cut timber or other matter with a saw.

SAWDUST, sâw'düst, s. Dust made by the attrition of the saw.

SAWFISH, sâw'fish, s. A sort of fish.

SAWPIT, sâw'pit, s. Pit over which timber is laid to be sawn by two men.

SAW-WORT, sâw'wört, s. A plant.

SAW-WREST, sâw'rêst, s. A sort of tool. With the saw-wrest they set the teeth of the saw.

SAWER, sâw'ür, } s.

SAWYER, sâw'yür, 113. }
One whose trade is to saw timber into boards or beams.

SAXIFRAGE, sâk'sê-frådje, s. A plant.

SAYING, sâ'ing, s. 410. Expression, words, opinion sententiously delivered.

SAYS, sêz. Third person of To Say.

↪ This seems to be an incorrigible deviation. 90.

SCAB, skâb, s. An incrustation formed over a sore by dried matter; the itch or mange of horses; a paltry fellow, so named from the itch.

SCABBARD, skâb'bård, s. 418. The sheath of a sword.

SCABBED, skâb'bêd, or skâbd, a. 366. Covered or diseased with scabs; paltry, sorry.

↪ This word, like learned, blessed, and some others, when used as an adjective, is always pronounced in two syllables, and when a participle, in one. See Principles, No 362.

SCABBEDNESS, skâb'bêd-nês, s. The state of being scabbed.

SCABBINESS, skâb'bê-nês, s. The quality of being scabby.

SCABBY, skâb'bê, a. Diseased with scabs.

SCABIOUS, skâ'bê-üs, a. Itchy, leprous.

SCABROUS, skâ'brûs, a. 314. Rough, rugged, pointed on the surface; harsh, unmusical.

SCABWORT, skâb'wört, s. A plant.

SCAD, skâd, s. A kind of fish; probably the same as Shad.

SCAFFOLD, skâf'fûld, s. 166. A temporary gallery or stage raised either for shows or spectators; the gallery raised for execution of great malefactors; frames of timber erected on the side of a building for the workmen.

SCAFFOLDAGE, skâf'fûl-didje, s. 90. Gallery, hollow floor.

SCAFFOLDING, skâf'fûl-ding, s. 410. Building slightly erected.

SCALADE, skâ-lâde, } s.

SCALADO, skâ-lâ-dô, }
A storm given to a place by raising ladders against the walls.—See Lumbago.

SCALARY, skâl'â-rê, a. Proceeding by steps like those of a ladder.

To SCALD, skâld, v. a. 84. To burn with hot liquor.

SCALD, skâld, s. Scurf on the head.

SCALD, skâld, a. Paltry, sorry.

SCALDHEAD, skâld-hêd, s. A loathsome disease, a kind of local leprosy in which the head is covered with a scab.

SCALE, skåle, s. A balance, a vessel suspended by a beam against another; the sign Libra in the Zodiac; the small shells or crusts which, lying one over another, make the coats of fishes; any thing exfoliated, a thin lamina; ladder, means of ascent; the act of storming by ladders; regular gradation, a regular series rising like a ladder; a figure subdivided by lines like the steps of a ladder, which is used to measure proportions between pictures and the thing represented; the series of harmonick or musical proportions; any thing marked at equal distances.

SCALL, skåwl, s. 84. Leprosy, morbid baldness.

SCALLION, skål'yûn, s. 113. A kind of onion.

SCALLOP, skål'lûp, s. 166. A fish with a hollow pectinated shell.

↪ This word is irregular; for it ought to have the a in the first syllable like that in tallow; but the deep sound of a is too firmly fixed by custom to afford any expectation of a change. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Smith, pronounce the a in the manner I have given it, and Mr. Perry only as in tallow.

To SCALLOP, skål'lûp, v. a. To mark on the edge with segments of circles.

SCALP, skålp, s. The scull, the cranium, the bone that encloses the brain; the integuments of the head.

SCAVENGER, skáv'ín-júr, s. 98. A petty magistrate, whose province is to keep the streets clean; a villain, a wicked wretch.

SCENERY, séné'r-é, s. The appearances of places or things; the representation of the place in which an action is performed; the disposition and consecution of the scenes of a play.

SCENE, séén, s. The stage, the theatre of dramattick poetry; the general appearance of any action, the whole contexture of objects, a display, a series, a regular disposition; part of a play; the place represented by the stage; the hanging of the theatre adapted to the play.

SCENICK, séné'nik, a. Dramattick, theatrical.

☞ From the general tendency of the antepenultimate accent to shorten the vowel, and the particular propensity to contract every vowel but u before the termination in ical, we find those in ic, which may be looked upon as abbreviations of the other, preserve the same shortening power with respect to the vowels which precede: and though the word in question might plead the long sound of the e in the Latin scenicus, yet, if this plea were admitted, we ought for the same reasons to alter the sound of o in comic; nor should we know where to stop. As a plain analogy, therefore, is formed by epic, topic, tropic, tonic, &c. it would be absurd to break in upon it, under pretence of conforming to Latin quantity; as this would disturb our most settled usages, and quite un hinge the language.—See Principles, No. 544.

SCENOGRAPHICAL, séné-ó-gráf-fé-kál, a. Drawn in perspective.

SCENOGRAPHICALLY, séné-ó-gráf-fé-kál-é, ad. In perspective.

SCEPTRED, sép'túrd, a. 359. Bearing a sceptre.

SCEPTICK, sép'tík, s.—See Skeptick.

SCHEDIASM, ské'dé-ázsm, s. (From the Greek σχέδιασμα.) Cursory writing on a loose sheet.

☞ This word is not in Johnson, but, from its utility, is certainly worthy of a niche in all our other Dictionaries as well as Ash's, where it is to be found. The Latins have their Schediasma, the French have their Feuille volante, and why should not the English have their Schediasm, to express what is written in an extemporary way on a loose sheet of paper, without the formality of composition?

SCHEDULE, séd'jüle, or skéd'jüle, s. A small scroll; a little inventory.

☞ In the pronunciation of this word we seem to depart both from the Latin schedula and the French schedule. If we follow the first, we ought to pronounce the word skedule, 353; if the last, schedule; but entirely sinking the ch in schedule seems to be the prevailing mode, and too firmly fixed by custom to be altered in favour of either of its original words. Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry, and Buchanan, pronounce it skedule; but Mr. Ephinston, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Nares, Barclay, Fenning, and Shaw, setule: though if we may believe Dr. Jones, it was pronounced skedule in Queen Anne's time.

559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fåt 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pline 105, pin 107—nô 162, môve 164,

SCHEME, skê²mê, s. 353. A plan, a combination of various things into one view, design, or purpose; a project, a contrivance, a design; a representation of the aspects of the celestial bodies, any lineal or mathematical diagram.

SCHEMER, skê²mûr, s. 98. A projector, a contriver.

SCHESIS, skê²sîs, s. A habitude, the relative state of a thing, with respect to other things; a rhetorical figure, in which a supposed affection or inclination of the adversary is introduced in order to be exposed.

SCHISM, sîzm, s. A separation or division in the church.

↪ The common pronunciation of this word is contrary to every rule for pronouncing words from the learned languages, and ought to be altered. Ch in English words, coming from the Greek words with χ, ought always to be pronounced like k; and I believe the word in question is almost the only exception throughout the language. However strange, therefore, schizm may sound, it is the only true and analogical pronunciation; and we might as well pronounce scheme, seme, as schism, sizm there being exactly the same reason for both. But when once a false pronunciation is fixed as this is, it requires some daring spirit to begin the reformation; but when once begun, as it has, what seldom happens, truth, novelty, and the appearance of Greek erudition on its side, there is no doubt of its success. Whatever, therefore, may be the fate of its pronunciation, it ought still to retain its spelling. This must be held sacred, or the whole language will be metamorphosed: for the very same reason that induced Dr. Johnson to spell sceptick, skeptick, ought to have made him spell schism, sizm, and schedule, sedule. All our orthoëpists pronounce the word as I have marked it.

SCHISMATICAL, sîz-mât²-tê-kâl, a. Implying schism, practising schism.

SCHISMATICALLY, sîz-mât²-tê-kâl-ê, ad. In a schismatical manner.

SCIOLOUS, sl-ô-lûs, a. Superficially or imperfectly knowing.

SCIOMACHY, sl-ôm-mâ-kê, s. Battle with a shadow.—See Monomachy.

↪ Mr. Nares questions whether the c should not be pronounced hard in this word, (or as it ought rather to be schimachy;) and if so, he says, ought we not to write skiamachy, for the same reason as skeptick? I answer, Exactly.—See Scirrhus and Skeptick.

Dr. Johnson's folio accents this word properly on the second syllable (see Principles, No. 518) but the quarto on the first.

SCION, sl-ûn, s. 166. A small twig taken from one tree to be ingrafted into another.

SCIRE FACIAS, sl-rê-fâ-shâs, s. A writ judicial in law.

SCIRRHUS, skîr²-rûs, s. 109. An indurated gland.

↪ This word is sometimes, but improperly, written schirrus, with the h in the first syllable instead of the last; and Bailey and Fenning have given us two aspirations, and spelt it schirrhus; both of which modes of spelling the word are contrary to the general analogy of orthography; for as the word comes from the Greek σκήρρως, the latter r only can have the aspiration, as the first of these double letters has always the spiritus lenis; and the c in the first syllable, as it arises from the Greek κ, and not the χ, no more reason can be given for placing the h after it, by spelling it schirrus, than there is for spelling scæpe from σκήπη, schene, or scæptre from σκήπτρον, scheptre. The most correct Latin orthography confirms this opinion, by spelling the word in question scirrhus; and, according to the most settled analogy of our own language, and the constant method of pronouncing words from the Greek and Latin, the c ought to be soft before the i in this word, and the first syllable should be pronounced like the first of syrr-inge, Syr-i-us, &c.

Whatever might have been the occasion of the false orthography of this word, its false pronunciation seems fixed beyond recovery; and Dr. Johnson tells us it ought to be written skirrhus, not merely because it comes from σκήρρως, but because c in English has before e and i the sound of s. Dr. Johnson is the last man that I should have suspected of giving this advice. What! because a false orthography has obtained, and a false pronunciation in consequence of it, must both these errors be confirmed by a still grosser departure from analogy? A little reflection on the consequences of so pernicious a practice would, I doubt not, have made Dr. Johnson retract his advice. While a true orthography remains, there is some hope that a false pronunciation may be reclaimed; but when once the orthography is altered, pronunciation is incorrigible; and we must bow to the tyrant, however false may be his title.—See Principles, No. 350, and the word Skeptick.

Mr. Sheridan pronounces this word skirrous; Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, and W. Johnston, have omitted it; neither Dr. Kenrick, nor Buchanan, take any notice of the sound of c, and, according to them, it might be pronounced s; but Barclay writes it to be pronounced skirrus.

SCIRRHOUS, skîr²-rûs, a. 314. Having a gland indurated.

nör 167, nót 163—tube 171, túb 172, búll 173—óil 299—póund 313—thi 466, this 469.

↳ This word has been used latterly as a verb active in a very different sense, and in better company than one could have imagined. This sense, when applied to principles or opinions, is that of reprobating or despising; and we sometimes find, in parliamentary speeches, that certain opinions or principles are scouted; still, however, with me, it passed for irreputious and demivulgar, till I found it used by one of the guardians of language as well as of religion and politics, the Anti-Jacobin Review. "The first is the admirable and judicious Hooker; who scouts the opinion of those, who, because the names of all church officers are words of relation, because a shepherd must have his flock, a teacher his scholars, a minister his company which he ministereth unto, therefore suppose that no man should be ordained a minister but for some certain congregation, and unless he be tied to some certain parish. 'Perceive they not,' says he, 'how by this means, they make it unlawful for the church to employ men at all in converting nations?'"

SEPULCHRE, sêp-pûl-kûr, s. 416. 177. A grave, a tomb.

↳ I consider this word as having altered its original accent on the second syllable, either by the necessity or caprice of the poets, or by its similitude to the generality of words of this form and number of syllables, 503, which generally have the accent on the first syllable. Dr. Johnson tells us it is accented by Shakespeare and Milton on the second syllable, but by Jonson and Prior more properly on the first; and he might have added, as Shakespeare has sometimes done:

"Go to thy lady's grave and call her thence;

"Or at the least in hers, sepulchre thine."

Shakespeare

"I am glad to see that time survive,
"Where merit is not sepulchred alive."

Ben Jonson.

"Thou so sepulchred in such pomp dost lie,
"That kings for such a tomb would wish to die."

Milton.

"See the wide waste of all involving years;

"And Rome its own sad sepulchre appears."

Addison.

To accent this word on the second syllable, as Shakespeare and Milton have done, is agreeable to a very general rule, when we introduce into our own language a word from the Greek or Latin, and either preserve it entire, or with the same number of syllables; in this case we preserve the accent on the same syllable as in the original word. This rule has some exceptions, as may be seen in the Principles, No. 503, e, but has still a very great extent. Now sepulchrum, from which this word is derived, has the accent on the second syllable; and sepulchre ought to have it on the same; while sepulture, on the contrary, being formed from sepultura, by dropping a syllable, the accent removes to the first, see Academy. As a confirmation that the current pronunciation of sepulchre was with the accent on the second syllable, every old inhabitant of London can recollect always having heard the Church called by that name so pronounced; but the antepenultimate accent seems now so fixed as to make an alteration hopeless. Mr. Forster, in his Essay on Accent and Quantity, says that this is the common pronunciation of the present day; and Dr. Johnson, Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, Dr. Ash, Mr. Perry, Barclay, Entick, and W. Johnston, place the accent on the first syllable both of this word and sepulture. Fenning places the accent on the second syllable of sepulchre when a noun, and on the first when a verb. Mr. Sheridan very properly reverses this order: W. Johnston places the accent on the second syllable of sepulture; and Bailey on the second of both. All our orthoëpists place the accent on the second syllable of sepulchral, except Dr. Ash and Barclay, who place it upon the same syllable as in sepulchre; and the uncouth pronunciation this accentuation produces, is a fresh proof of the impropriety of the common accent. 493.

→ The corrupt pronunciation of this word is become universal, though in Junius's time it should seem to have been confined to London; for, under the word shore, he says, "Common shore, Londinensibus ita corrupte dicitur, the common sewer." Johnson has given us no etymology of this word; but Skinner tells us, "Non infeliciter Cosellus declinat a verb. Issae, d tuncque putat quasi Issae abjecta initiali syllaba." Nothing can be more natural than this derivation; the s going into sh before v, preceded by the accent, is agreeable to analogy, 452; and the u in this case being pronounced like ew, might easily draw the word into the common orthography, sewer; while the sound of sh was preserved, and the ew as in shew, strew, and sew, might soon slide into o, and thus produce the present anomaly.

SHIRE, shêre, s. 8. 106. A division of the kingdom, a county.

☞ The pronunciation of this word is very irregular, as it is the only pure English word in the language where the final e does not produce the long diphthongal sound of i when the accent is on it; but this irregularity is so fixed as to give the regular sound a pedantic stiffness. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Buchanan, however, have adopted this sound, in which they have been followed by Mr. Smith; but Mr. Elphinston, Dr. Lowth, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry and Barclay, are for the irregular sound; W. Johnston gives both, but places the irregular first; and the Grammar called Bickerstaff's, recommended by Steele, adopts this sound, and gives this rule:

"To sound like double (e) (i) does incline;
"As in Machine, and Shire, and Magazine;
"Like (a) in Sirrah; but writ (æ) in join."

It may likewise be observed, that this word, when unaccented at the end of words, as Nottinghamshire, Wiltshire, &c. is always pronounced with the i like ee.

SHIRT, shûrt, s. 108. The under linen garment of a man.

To SHIRT, shûrt, v. a. To cover, to clothe as in a shirt.

To SHOG, shôg, v. a. To shake, to agitate by sudden interrupted impulses.

SHONE, shôn. The pret. of Shine.

☞ This word is frequently pronounced so as to rhyme with tone; but the short sound of it is by far the most usual among those who may be styled polite speakers.

This sound is adopted by Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry, and Mr. Smith; nor do I find the other sound in any of our Dictionaries that have the word.

SHOOK, shôok, 306. The pret. and in Poëtry, part. pass. of Shake.

To SHOOT, shôot, v. a. Pret. I Shot. Part. Shot or Shotten. SHORELESS, shôre^l-lêss, a. Having no coast.

SHORN, shôrne. The part. pass. of Shear.

☞ This word was inadvertently marked with the third sound of o in the first edition of this Dictionary; but from considering its analogy with swear, wear, and tear, I do not hesitate to alter it to the first sound of that vowel: Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Smith, and W. Johnston, are for the first pronunciation; but Mr. Perry, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Elphinston, are for the last: and these authorities, with analogy on their side, are decisive.

SHREWMOUSE, shrô-mûse, s. A mouse of which the bite was generally supposed venomous.

To SHRIEK, shrêk, v. n. 275. To cry out inarticulately with anguish or horreur, to scream.

SHRIEK, shrêk, s. An inarticulate cry of anguish or horreur.

SHRIEVE, shrêv, s. 275. A sheriff.

↳ This was the ancient mode of writing and pronouncing this word. Stow, indeed, writes it shrieve; but it is highly probable that the i had exactly the sound of ie in grieve, thieve, &c. and the common people of London to this day have preserved this old pronunciation, though it is wearing away fast among them. To be convinced, that this is the true etymological manner of writing and pronouncing it, we need but attend to the Saxon word from which it is derived: reeve, or reeve, signifies a steward; and shrieve is but a contraction of shire reeve, or shire steward. But however just this orthography and pronunciation may be in other respects, it wants the true stamp of polite usage to make it current; it is now grown old and vulgar, and Pope's use of this word,

"Now Mayors and Shrieves all hush'd and satiate lay,"— must only be looked upon as assisting the humour of the scene he describes.

SHRIEVALTY, shrê'vâl-tê, s. The office of a sheriff.

↳ By a caprice common in language, this compound is not nearly so antiquated as its simple; though it should seem, that if the old root be taken away, and another planted in its stead, the branches ought to spring from the latter, and not the former. But though we seldom hear shrieve for sheriff, except among the lower classes of people in London, we not unfrequently hear, even among the better sort, shrievalty for sheriffalty; and Junius, in one of his letters to the Duke of Grafton, says, "Your next appearance in office is marked with his election to the shrievalty." Public Advertiser, July 9, 1771. This is certainly an inaccuracy; and such an inaccuracy, in such a writer as Junius, is not a little surprising.

☞ A very extraordinary pronunciation of this word prevails in London, and, what is more extraordinary, on the Stage, so different from every other word of the same form as to make it a perfect oddity in the language. This pronunciation approaches to the word sithe; and the only difference is, that sithe has the flat aspiration as in this; and sigh the sharp one, as in thin. It is not easy to conjecture what could be the reason of this departure from analogy, unless it were to give the word a sound which seems an echo to the sense; and if this intention had gone no farther than the lengthening or shortening of a vowel, it might have been admitted, as in fearful, cheerful, pierce, ferce, great, leisure, and some others; but pronouncing gh like th in this word is too palpable a contempt of orthography to pass current without the stamp of the best, the most universal and permanent usage on its side. The Saxon combination gh, according to the general rule, both in the middle and at the end of a word, is silent. It had anciently a guttural pronunciation, which is still retained in great part of Scotland, and in some of the northern parts of England: but every guttural sound has been long since banished from the language; not, however, without some efforts to continue, by changing these letters, sometimes into the related guttural consonant k, as in lough, hough, &c. and sometimes into a consonant entirely unrelated to them, as in laugh, cough, &c. These are the only transmutations of these letters; and these established irregularities are quite sufficient without admitting such as are only candidates for confusion. If it be pleaded that sigh the better expresses the emission of breath in the act of sighing, it may be answered, that nothing can be more erroneous, as the tongue and teeth have nothing to do in this action. Mr. Sheridan has, indeed, to assist this expression, spelt the word sh, as an aspiration must necessarily accompany the act of sighing; but (to take no notice that, in this case, the h ought to be before the i) 397, though such expression may be very proper in oratory, when accompanied by passion, it would be as affected to give it this aspiration in ordinary speech, as to pronounce the word fearful with a tremor of the voice and a faltering of the tongue, or to utter the word laugh with a convulsive motion of the breast and lungs. To these reasons may be added the laws of rhyme; which necessarily exclude this affected pronunciation, and oblige us to give the word its true analogical sound:

"Love is a smoke, rais'd with the fume of sighs;

"Being purg'd, a fire, sparkling in lovers' eyes."

Shakespeare.

SINISTER, sîn'nis-tûr, a. 98. 503. Being on the left hand; left, not right; bad, deviating from honesty, unfair; unlucky, inauspicious.

↳ This word, though uniformly accented on the second syllable in the poets quoted by Johnson, is as uniformly accented on the first by all our lexicographers, and is uniformly so pronounced by the best speakers. Mr. Nares tells us, that Dr. Johnson seems to think, that when this word is used in its literal sense, as,

"In his sinister hand, instead of ball,
"He plac'd a mighty mug of potent ale."

Dryden.

It has the accent on the second syllable; but when in the figurative sense of corrupt, insidious, &c. on the first. This distinction seems not to be founded on the best usage, and is liable to the objections noticed under the word Boul.—See Principles, No. 495.

SKEPTICK, skêp'tik, s. 350. One who doubts, or pretends to doubt of every thing.—See Schirrus.

↪ It is with some reluctance I have given this word as Dr. Johnson has written it, a place in this Dictionary; not because it is not generally pronounced in this manner; but that I think conforming our spelling to a prevailing pronunciation, when this pronunciation is contrary to analogy, is pregnant with the greatest evils that can happen to a language. While the original landmark is standing, the true proprietor may claim his rights; but when once that is effaced, there is no hope of a resumption. How Dr. Johnson could remove this landmark is astonishing. It is one of those unaccountable absurdities that sometimes enter into the characters of men, whose understandings are as much above the rest of the world in some things, as they are below them in others. The truth is, this great man troubled himself little about pronunciation; he seems to have cared as little for etymologies; and even grammatical disquisitions seem not to have been his favourite study; but when words were to be precisely defined, when the boundaries of their significations were to be fixed, and their most delicate shades of meaning to be distinguished and exemplified, this task, so difficult to the strongest mind, seemed to present him with an operation worthy of his powers; in this labour he was, indeed, a literary Hercules, and in this he has toiled with honour to himself, and to the essential improvement of the English language.

SKEPTICAL, skêp'tê-kâl, a. Doubtful, pretending to universal doubt.

To SLABBER, sláb-búr, or slób-búr, v. n. To let the spittle fall from the mouth, to drivel; to shed or pour any thing.

→ The second sound of this word is by much the more usual one; but as it is in direct opposition to the orthography, it ought to be discountenanced, and the a restored to its true sound. Correct usage seems somewhat inclined to this reformation, and every lover of correctness ought to favour it.

SLABBERER, sláb-búr-úr, s. 98. He who slabbers.

SLABBY, sláb-bé, a. Thick, viscous; wet, foody.

To SLAKE, sláke, v. a. To quench, to extinguish,

→ There is a corrupt pronunciation of this word like the word slack. This is the word, as Dr. Johnson observes, from which it is evidently derived; but as it has acquired a distinct and appropriated meaning, it is with great propriety that it differs a little from its original, both in orthography and pronunciation.

All our orthoepists unite in pronouncing this word regularly; but, as Mr. Smith observes, bricklayers and their labourers universally pronounce it with the short a; as if written slack; and it may be added, that the correctest speakers, when using the participial adjective in the words unslaked lime, pronounce the a in the same manner; but this ought to be avoided.

To SMIRK, smêrk, v. n.

Johnson defines this word, "To look affectedly soft or kind;" Ash, "To smile wantonly," and Mason defines the substantive smirk to be "a settled smile." Ash appears to me to have been the farthest from the true signification; for the quality of wantonness does not seem to enter into the idea of this word: the genuine meaning seems to be that which Johnson has given us from Spencer under the adjective smerry which signifies nice, smart; therefore the verb may perhaps not be improperly defined to be, To assume a pleasant vivacity of countenance.

To SOJOURN, sô-jûrn, v. n. 314. To dwell any where for a time, to live as not at home, to inhabit as not in a settled habitation.

↳ This verb and noun, as may be seen in Johnson, are variously accented by the poets; but our modern orthôpists have in general given the accent to the first syllable of both words. Dr. Kenrick, Perry, Entick, and Buchanan, accent the second syllable; but Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Ash, Mr. Nares, W. Johnston, Bailey, Barclay, and Fenning, the first. Mr. Scott gives both accents, but that on the first syllable the place.

SOLDAN, sôl-dân, s. The emperor of the Turks.

To SOLDER, sôl-dûr, v. a. To unite or fasten with any kind of metallick cement; to mend, to unite an thing broken.

↳ Dr. Johnson seems to favour writing this word without the l, as "it is sometimes pronounced; but the many examples he has brought where it is spelt with l, show sufficiently how much this orthography is established. It is highly probable, that omitting the sound of l in this word began with mechanics; and as the word has been lately little used, except in mechanical operations, this pronunciation has crept into our Dictionaries, but ought not to be extended to the liberal and metaphorical use of the word. It is derived from the Latin soldare, the Italian soldare, or the French souder; and when other things are equal, Dr. Johnson's rule of deriving words rather from the French than the Latin, is certainly a good one, but ought not to overturn a settled orthography, which has a more original language than the French it is favour. Though our orthôpists agree in leaving out the l, they differ in pronouncing the o. Sheridan sounds the o as in soil; W. Johnston as in sober; and Mr. Nares as the diphthong aw. Mr. Smith says, that Mr. Walker pronounces the l in this word, but every workman pronounces it as rhyming nør 167, nõt 163—tũbe 171, tũb 172, bũll 173—ũil 299—pũund 313—thin 466, THIS 469.

with fodder: to which it may be answered, that workmen ought to take their pronunciation from scholars, and not scholars from workmen.—See Cleff.

SOOT, sôot, s. 309. Condensed or embodied smoke.

Notwithstanding I have Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, and the professors of this Black Art themselves, against me in the pronunciation of this word, I have ventured to prefer the regular pronunciation to the irregular. The adjective sooty has its regular sound among the correctest speakers, which has induced Mr. Sheridan to mark it so; but nothing can be more absurd than to pronounce the substantive in one manner, and the adjective derived from it by adding y, in another. The other orthoëpists, therefore, who pronounce both these words with the oo like y, are more consistent than Mr. Sheridan, though, upon the whole, not so right.

SOURCE, sôrse, s. 318. Spring, fountain-head; original, first producer.

☞ Some respectable speakers have attempted to give the French sound to the diphthong in this word and its compound resource, as if written source and ressource; but as this is contrary to analogy, so it is to general usage. Sheridan, Nares, Smith, and W. Johnston, give the same sound to both these words as I have done. Mr. Perry gives the same sound to source, and, as well as I can guess from the blindness of the print, to resource also. Mr. Scott gives both sounds, but seems to prefer the first: Kenrick only gives source the sound of source, and the diphthong ou in resource, the same sound as in hour, town, &c.

SOURISH, sôur'ish, a. Somewhat sour.

SOURLY, sôur'lé, ad. With acidity; with acrimony.

SPERMACETI, spér-má-sé-té, s. (Corruptedly pronounced Parmasiy.)

↳ When Shakespeare makes Hotspur describe a fox using this word,

"And telling me the sovereign't thing on earth,
"Was porraciity for an inward bruise."

It is highly probable this was not a foppish pronunciation, but that which generally obtained in Queen Elizabeth's time, and has, among the vulgar, been continued to ours.

SPIKE, spíke, s. An ear of corn; a long nail of iron or wood, a long rod of iron sharpened; a smaller species of lavender.

To SPIKE, spíke, v. a. To fasten with long nails; to set with spikes.

SPIKENARD, spíke-nárd, s. The name of a plant; the oil produced from the plant.

↳ Mr. Elphinston is the only orthoëpist who pronounces the i short in this word; Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Perry, W. Johnston, and Buchanan, preserve it long as in spike: and though I am well aware of the common idiom of our pronunciation to shorten the simple in the compound, see Knowledge, yet I think this idiom ought not to be sought after, when not established by custom.

SPILL, spíll, s. A small shiver of wood, or thin bar of iron; a small quantity of money.

To SPILL, spíll, v. a. To shed, to lose by shedding; to throw away.

To SPILL, spíll, v. n. To waste, to be lavish; to be shed, to be lost by being shed.

SPINY, spí-né, a. Thorny, briary, perplexed.

SPIRACLE, spír-á-kl, s. 109. A breathing hole, a vent, a small aperture.

↳ I have differed from Mr. Sheridan in the quantity of the i in the first syllable of this word, because I think the same antepenultimate accent, which shortens the o in oracle, and the i in miracle, ought to have the same influence in the word in question. 503.

SPIRAL, spí-rál, a. 88. Curve, winding, circularly involved.

SPIRALLY, spí-rál-é, ad. In a spiral form.

SPIRE, spíre, s. A curve line, any thing wreathed or contorted, a curl, a twist, a wreath; any thing growing up taper, a round pyramid, a steeple; the top or uppermost point.

To SPIRE, spíre, v. n. To shoot up pyramidally.

SPIRIT, spír-ít, s. 109. Breath, wind in motion; an immaterial substance; the soul of man; an apparition; ardour, courage; genius, vigour of mind; intellectual powers distinct from the body; sentiment; eagerness, desire; man of activity, man of life; that which gives nôr 167, nôl 163—tûbe 171, tûb 172, bûll 173—ôil 299—pôund 313—tûin 466, This 469.

vigour or cheerfulness to the mind; any thing eminently pure and refined; that which hath power or energy; an inflammable liquor raised by distillation.

☞ The general sound of the first i in this word and all its compounds was, till lately, the sound of e in merit: but a very laudable attention to propriety has nearly restored the i to its true sound; and now spirit, sounded as if written spirít, begins to grow vulgar. See Principles, No. 103, 109, 110, and the word Miracle.

Mr. Sheridan, W. Johnston, and Mr. Smith, have given into this false sound of i, 109; but Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Perry, have given it the true sound; and Mr. Nares very justly thinks that this word, miracle, and cistern, are now more frequently and properly heard with the short sound of i.

To SPIRIT, spîr'it, v. a. To animate or actuate as a spirit; to excite, to animate, to encourage; to draw, to entice.

SPIRITED, spîr'it-éd, a. Lively, full of fire.

SPISSITUDE, spîs-sé-tûde, s. Grossness, thickness.

SPIT, spît, s. A long prong on which meat is driven to be turned before the fire; such a depth of earth as is pierced by one action of the spade.

To SPIT, spît, v. a. Pret. Spat. Part. pass. Spit or Spitted. To put upon a spit; to thrust through.

To SPIT, spît, v. n. To eject from the mouth; to throw out spittle or moisture of the mouth.

SPITAL, spît-tâl, s. Corrupted from Hospital, and seldom used but to a sermon preached at an hospital, as, a Spital sermon; or in the proverbial phrase, Kob not the spital; or in the name of that district of London called Spitalfields.

☞ The a in all these words has a tendency to sink its sound, and to confound them with spittle. In the last of these words this tendency is incurable; but in the two first it would be far from pedantic to preserve the sound of the a as in medal. Dr. Johnson seems to depart from etymology in doubling the t in these words.

To SPITCHCOCK, spîtsh-kôk, v. a. To cut an cel in pieces and broil it.

SPITE, spîte, s. Malice, rancour, hate; Spite of, or in Spite of, notwithstanding, in defiance of.

SPLENICK, splén-îk, a. 508. Belonging to the spleen.

SPLEENISH, splén-ish, a. Fretful, peevish; properly Spleenish.

☞ Dr. Johnson has received this word without any remark upon the impropriety of its formation. To turn a Latin noun into an English adjective by the addition of ish, is false heraldry in language: especially as we have the English word spleen, from which it might have been formed with so much more propriety: but to pronounce the e long, as Mr. Sheridan has done, is adding absurdity to error.

SPLENITIVE, splén-é-tîv, a. 512. Hot, fiery, passionate. Not in use.

SPLENT, splént, s. Splent is a callous hard substance, or an insensible swelling, which breeds on or adheres to the shank-bone, and when it grows big spoils the shape of the leg.

SPRINGTIDE, spring²-låde, s. Tide at the new moon, high tide.

SPRINGY, spring²-lå, or spring²-gå, a. Elastic, having the power of restoring itself.

→ A most absurd custom has prevailed in pronouncing this adjective, as if it were formed from springe, a gin, rhyming with fringe, when nothing can be plainer than its formation from spring, an elastic body, and that the addition of y ought no more to alter the sound of g in this word, than it does in stringy, full of strings. It is certainly thus we ought to pronounce the substantive formed from this adjective, which we meet with in Mr. Forster: "In general, that nervous springiness, (if I may so express it) so very observable in Mr. Pope's metre, is often owing chiefly to a Trochee beginning his line." Essay on Accent and Quantity, p. 59.—But the absurdity is still increased when this vicious pronunciation is given to the adjective formed from spring, a fountain; this, however, is so contrary both to custom and analogy, that nothing but an oversight in Mr. Sheridan could have prevented his making the distinction. See Principles, No. 409.

STATIONARY, stáshún-á-ré, a. Fixed, not progressive.

↪ This word, though not noticed by Johnson; is used to signify the goods of a stationer: such as books, paper, and other commodities for writing. The reason why a seller of paper is called a stationer, is, that formerly the sellers of paper were itinerants or pedlars; and that as the trade became more important, they took a stand or station, which gave a name to the profession.

STATIONER, stáshún-úr, s. 98. A bookseller; a seller of paper.

STATIST, státtist, s. A statesman; a politician. Not in use.

STATISTICAL, státtis-té-kál; }
STATISTICK, státtis-tik; }

↪ This word is not found in any of our Dictionaries, and seems to have been first used by Sir John Sinclair in his plan for a statement of the trade, population, and productions of every county in Scotland; with the food, diseases, and longevity of its inhabitants: a plan which reflects the greatest credit on the understanding and benevolence of that gentleman; as it is big with advantages both to the philosopher and the politician. These words must not be confounded with statial and statick; for though such a plan leads to a philosophical weighing of these provincial circumstances; yet certainly the first idea is that of stating these circumstances; and therefore these words are formed from the English verb to state, and not from staticks, derived from the Greek word στασις.

To SUBJECT, súb-jêkt', v. a. 492. To put under; to reduce to submission, to make subordinate, to make submissive; to enslave, to make obnoxious; to expose, to make liable; to submit, to make accountable; to make subservient.

SUBJECTED, súb-jêktêd, part. adj. Put under; reduced to submission; exposed, made liable to.

↳ A very improper, though a very prevailing misaccutation of the passive participle of the word to subject, has obtained, which ought to be corrected. All the authorities in Johnson place the accent of subjected on the same syllable as the verb, except one from Milton:

"He subjected to man's service angel wings."

But in another passage Milton accents this word as it ought to be, even when an adjective:

".....The angel
"Led them direct and down the cliff as fast
"To the subjected plain."

But as the word subject is an adjective as well as a verb, and when an adjective it has always the accent on the first syllable, so the participle has not only caught the accent of the adjective, but, as one error commonly generates another, seems to have communicated the impropriety to the verb; which we sometimes hear, contrary to all analogy and authority, accented on the first syllable likewise. These improprieties are easily corrected at first, and in my opinion, they are not yet so rooted as to make correctness look like pedantry.

SUBJECT, súb-jêkt, a. Placed or situated under; living under the dominion of another; exposed, liable, obnoxious; being that on which any action operates.

Bounding, moving by starts.

↳ Mr. Sheridan is the only orthoëpist who has accented this word on the first syllable, as I have done; for Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Barclay, Fenning, Bailey, and Entick, accent the second. Its companion, Desultory, is accented on the first syllable by Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Johnson, Mr. Nares, Mr. Smith, and Fenning; but on the second by Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, Bailey, and Entick. As these two words must necessarily be accented alike, we see Dr. Johnson and Fenning are inconsistent. But though the majority of authorities are against me in both these words, I greatly mistake if analogy is not clearly on my side. See Principles, No. 512.

SUBSULTORILY, súb-sûl-túr-ê-lê, ad. In a bounding manner.

SUBTANGENT, súb-tân-tjênt, s. In any curve, is the line which determines the intersection of the tangent in the axis prolonged.

Lying under the earth, placed below the surface. The last two words only are in use.

SUBTERRANITY, súb-têr-râ-nê-tê, s. A place under ground. Not in use.

SUBTILE, súb-tîl, a. 140. Thin, not dense; nice, fine, delicate; piercing, acute; cunning, artful, sly, subdulous, deceitful; refined, acute beyond exactness. See Subtle.

SUBTILELY, súb-tîl-lê, ad. Finely, not grossly; artfully, cunningly.

SUBTILENESS, súb-tîl-nês, s. Fineness, rarcness; cunning, artfulness.

To SUBTILIATE, súb-tîl-yâte, v. a. 113. To make thin.

SUBTILIATION, súb-tîl-yâ-shùn, s. The act of making thin.

SUBTILTY, súb-tîl-tê, s. Thinness, fineness, exility of parts; nicety; refinement, too much acuteness; cunning, artifice, slieness.

SUBTILIZATION, súb-tîl-ê-zâ-shùn, s. Subtilization is making any thing so volatile as to rise readily in steam or vapour; refinement, superfluous acuteness.

To SUBTILIZE, súb-tîl-î-ze, v. a. To make thin, to make less gross or coarse; to refine; to spin into useless niceties.

SUBTLE, sût-têl, a. 347. 405. Sly, artful, cunning.

↳ This word and subtile, have been used almost indiscriminately to express very different senses, as may be seen in Johnson; but as custom has adopted a different spelling, and a different pronunciation for their different meanings, it is presumed it has not been without reason. That the first sense of the word meaning fine, acute, &c. should extend itself to the latter meaning sly, artful, &c. is not to be wondered at, as words have a natural tendency to fall into a bad sense; witness knave, villain, &c.; but if custom has marked this difference of sense by a difference of spelling and pronunciation, it should seem to be an effort of nature to preserve precision in our ideas. If these observations are just, the abstracts of these words ought to be kept as distinct as their concretes; from subtile, therefore, ought to be formed subtily, and from subtle, subtlety; the b being heard in the two first and mute in the two last.

SUBTLETY, sût-têl-tê, s. Artfulness, cunning.

SUBTLY, sût-têl, ad. Sliily, artfully, cunningly, nicely, delicately.

To SUBTRACT, súb-trákt', v. a.—See Substract.

↳ This orthography seems to prevail over substract. The vanity of deriving words from the Latin rather than a living language is very prevalent; but the s in this word intervening between the two mutes certainly makes the word flow more easily, and the alteration is therefore to be regretted.

SUBTRACTION, súb-trák-shùn, s.—See Substraction.

SUBTRAHEND, súb-trâ-hênd', s. The number to be taken from a larger number.

nör 167, nôt 163—tûbe 171, tâb 172, bull 173—ôil 299—pöünd 313—tlin 466, This 469.

SUCCESSION, súk-sés'h'úin, s. Consecution, series of one thing or person following another; a series of things or persons following one another; a lineage, an order of descendants; the power or right of coming to the inheritance of ancestors.

SUCCESSIVE, súk-sés'-sív, a. 158. Following in order, continuing a course or consecution uninterrupted; inherited by succession.

SUCCESSIVELY, súk-sés'-sív-lé, ad. In uninterrupted order, one after another.

SUCCESSIVENESS, súk-sés'-sív-nés, s. The state of being successive.

SUCCESSLESS, súk-sés'-lés, a. Unlucky, unfortunate, failing of the event desired.

SUCCESSOR, súk-sés'-súr, or súk-sés'-úr, s. 503. One that follows in the place or character of another, correlative to Predecessor.

↳ This word is not unfrequently pronounced with the accent on the second syllable, as if it were formed from success; but this accentuation, though agreeable to its Latin original, has, as in confessor, yielded to the prevailing power of the English antepenultimate accent. Dr. Johnson, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Elphinston, and Entick, accent this word on the first syllable; and Dr. Ash, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, and Bailey, on the second; Barclay and Fenning give both, but prefer the first: Mr. Scott gives both, and prefers the second; but, from the opinion that is foolishly gone forth, that we ought to accent words as near the beginning as possible there is little doubt that the antepenultimate accent will prevail.

SUCCINCT, súk-síngkt', a. 408. Tucked or girded up, having the clothes drawn up; short, concise, brief.

SUCCINCTLY, súk-síngkt'-lé, ad. Briefly, concisely.

SUCCORY, súk'-kúr-é, s. 557. A plant.—See Domestick.

SUGAR, shúg-úr, s. 175. 454. The native salt of the sugar-cane, obtained by the expression and evaporation of its juices; any thing proverbially sweet; a chymical dry crystallization.

To SUGAR, shúg-úr, v. a. To impregnate or season with sugar; to sweeten.

SUGARY, shúg-úr-é, a. Sweet, tasting of sugar.

To SUGGEST, súg-jést, v. a. To hint, to intimate, to insinuate good or ill; to seduce, to draw to ill by insinuation; to inform secretly.

Though the first g in exaggerate is, by a difficulty of pronunciation, assimilated to the last, this is not always the case in the present word. For though we sometimes hear it sounded as if written sug-jest, the most correct speakers generally preserve the first and last g in their distinct and separate sounds.

Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Nares, pronounce the g in both syllables soft, as if written sug-jest. Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry, and Barclay, make the first g hard, and the second soft as if written sug-jest, as I have done; for as the accent is not on these consonants, there is not the same apology for pronouncing the first soft as there is in exaggerate; which see.

SUGGESTION, súg-jés-tshún, s. Private hint, intimation, insinuation, secret notification.

SULCATED, súl-ká-téd, a. Furrowed.

SULKY, súl-ké, a. Silently sullen, sour, morose, obstinate.

This word had long been a vagabond in conversation, and was not to be found in any of our Dictionaries till it was lately admitted to a place in Entick's, and, from its very frequent use, may now be considered as a denizen of the language. Mr. Colman had, many years ago, made use of it in his prologue to The Wife in the Right, where he says,

"No sulky critick to the Playhouse drawn, Whom modern Comedy provokes to yawn."

And this writer's authority alone is a sufficient proof of the propriety and utility of the word. It may perhaps be objected, that the word sullen is perfectly equivalent, and renders this word useless. Those, however, who consider language philosophically, know that there are no words perfectly synonymous, and consequently that there are no useless words. If it be asked what is the difference between these words, I would answer, that sullenness seems to be an habitual sulkiness, and sulkiness a temporary sullenness. The former may be an innate disposition; the latter, a disposition occasioned by recent injury. The one has a malignancy in it threatening danger; the other, an obstinate averseness to pleasure. Thus we are in a sullen mood, and in a sulky fit: Men and Women are said to be sullen and Children sulky; sullenness may be predicated of inanimate objects, sulkiness only of such as are animated.

"No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows;
The dreadful East is all the wind that blows."
Pope.

If these distinctions are just, there is good reason for receiving the word in question, and incorporating it into the language, even though it had not been adopted by the respectable writer I have quoted.

SUP, sùp, s. A small draught, a mouthful of liquor.

SUPERABLE, sù-pèr-â-bl, a. 405. Conquerable, such as may be overcome.

There is a corrupt pronunciation of this word, arising from want of attention to the influence of accent on the sounds of the letters, which makes the first syllable of this word sound like the noun shue. This pronunciation Mr. Sheridan has adopted, not only in this word, but in all those which commence with the inseparable preposition super. That this is contrary to the most established rules of orthoëpy, may be seen in Principles, No. 454 and 462; and that it is contrary to Mr. Sheridan himself, may be seen by his giving the s in the words, insuperable, insuperableness, insuperably, and insuperability, its simple sound only.—See Insuperable.

SUPERABLENESS, sù-pèr-â-bl-nès, s. Quality of being conquerable.

↳ This substantive was, till within these few years, universally pronounced with the accent on the last syllable, like the verb; but since Johnson and Lowth led the way, a very laudable desire of regulating and improving our language has given the substantive the accent on the first syllable, according to a very general rule in the language, 492; but this has produced an anomaly in pronunciation, for which, in my opinion, the accentual distinction of the noun and verb does not make amends: if we place the accent on the first syllable of the noun, the ry in the last must necessarily be pronounced like ry in barley, attorney, journey, &c. Notwithstanding therefore this accentuation has numbers to support it; I think it but a short-sighted emendation, and not worth adopting. All our orthoëpists pronounce the verb with the accent on the last, except Fenning, who accents the first. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Nares, Dr. Ash, Perry, and Entick, accent the first syllable of the noun; but Dr. Johnson and Bailey, the original lexicographers, accent the last. Dr. Keurick does not accent the noun, and Barclay has not inserted it.

SUSCEPTIBILITY, sús-sép-té-bíl-é-té, s. Quality of admitting, tendency to admit.

SUSCEPTIBLE, sús-sép-té-bl, a. Capable of admitting.—See Incomparable.

Dr. Johnson says, Prior has accented this word improperly on the first syllable. To which observation Mr. Mason adds, "Perhaps it is Johnson who has improperly placed the accent on the second syllable." If Mr. Mason were asked why? perhaps he would be puzzled to answer. If it be said that usage is on the side of Prior, what shall we think of all our orthoepists who have accented this word like Johnson? for thus we find the word accented by Sheridan, Kenrick, Scott, Perry, W. Johnston, Buchanan, and Barclay. Etieck has, indeed, the accent on the first, but on the second of susceptive; and if usage alone is pleaded for the accent on the first, it may be answered, What can be a better proof of usage than the authors I have quoted? But Mr. Nares, with his usual good sense, reprobrates this accentuation on the first syllable, and says it is high time to oppose it. The only argument that can be alleged for it, is that which Mr. Elmhirst has brought in favour of comparable, admirable, and acceptable, which is, that when the accent is on the second syllable of these words, they signify only a physical possibility of being compared, admitted, and accepted; but when the accent is on the first, they signify a fitness or worthiness of being compared, admitted, and accepted. "Thus," says he, "one thing is literally comparable with another, if it can be compared with it, though not perhaps comparable, that is fit to be compared to it; so a thing may be acceptable by a man, that is far from being acceptable to him."—Principles of the English Language, vol. 1. pag. 169. This is the best reason I ever yet heard for this high accentuation; but how such a difference of pronunciation tends to perplex and obscure the meaning, may be seen under the word Bowl; nor does the word in question seem susceptible of such a difference in the sense from a different accentuation. When Poets are on the rack for a word of a certain length and a certain accent, it is charity to make allowances for their necessities; but no quarter should be given to coxcombs in prose, who have no better plea for a novelty of pronunciation, than a fop has for being the first in the fashion, however ridiculous and absurd.

SWIMMINGLY, swím²-níng-lé, ad. Smoothly, without obstruction.

To SWINDLE, swín²-dl, v. a. 405. To cheat under the pretence of trading or trafficking.

☞ This word has been in very general use for nearly twenty years, and has not yet found its way into any of our Dictionaries.

From the recent introduction of this word, one should be led to believe, that this country was, till lately, a stranger to this species of fraud; but that it should be imported to us by so honest a people as the Germans, is still more surprising. That a language is a reçu of the science and manners of the people who speak it, will scarcely be questioned by those who consider the origin and progress of the human understanding; and if so, it is impossible that the manners should not influence the language, and that the language should not correspond to the manners. From this reasoning therefore we may conclude, that the faith of traffick was more sacred in England than in Germany, though Germany might in other respects be less vicious than England.

SWINE, swíne, s. A hog, a pig, a sow.

SWINEBREAD, swíne²-bréd, s. A kind of plant; truffles.

SWINEHERD, swíne²-hêrd, s. A keeper of hogs.

☞ This word, in the north of England, is pronounced swimard; and shows the tendency of our language to shorten the simple in the compound. See Principles, No. 515.

SWINEPIPE, swíne²-pipe, s. A bird of the thrush kind.

To SWING, swíng, v. n. 410. To wave to and fro hanging loosely; to fly backward and forward on a rope.

SWOLLEN, } swóln, 103. The part. pass. of Swell.

SWOLN, }

SWOM, swóm. The pret. of Swim. Not in use, Swam supplying its place.

To SWOON, swóon, v. n. 475. To suffer a suspension of thought and sensation, to faint.

☞ This word should be carefully distinguished in the pronunciation from soon: the v, as Mr. Nares justly observes, is effective, and should be heard. It would have been beneath a Dictionary of the least credit to take notice of a vulgar pronunciation of this word as if written soond, if it had not been adopted by one of our orthoëpists. The same observation holds good of the following word, which must not be pronounced exactly like soop.

SWOON, swóon, s. A lipothymy, a fainting fit.

To SWOOP, swóóp, v. a. 306. To fall at once as a hawk upon its prey; to prey upon, to catch up.

SWORDKNOT, sórd²-nót, s. Riband tied to the hilt of a sword.

SWORDLAW, sórd²-láv, s. Violence.

SWORDMAN, sórd²-mán, s. Soldier, fighting man.

☞ I see no good reason why we should not write and pronounce swordsmán and gouernsmán rather than swórdsmán and gouernsmán, though Johnson produces his authorities for the latter orthography from good authors. The s seems to have intervened naturally between the mute and the liquid to facilitate the pronunciation, as in statesman, sportsman, huntsman, and sometimes between the two liquids, as townsman, salesman, &c. But Dr. Johnson's sense of the word swórdsmán, meaning a man of the profession of the sword, or a soldier, is now obsolete; we now never hear the word but as signifying a man expert in the use of the sword; and in this sense he is always called a swordsmán.

SWORDPLAYER, sórd²-plá²-úr, s. Gladiator, fencer.

SWORE, swóre. The pret. of Swear.

SWORN, swórn. The part. pass. of Swear.

SYSTEMATIZE, sîs-têm-â-tîze, v. a. To reduce to a system.

→ I have met with this word nowhere but in Mason's Supplement to Johnson, and there I find it accented in a different way from what I have always heard it in conversation. In those circles which I have frequented, the accent has been placed on the first syllable; and if we survey the words of this termination, we shall find that ize is added to every word without altering the place of the accent; and that consequently systematize ought to have the accent on the first syllable. This reasoning is specious; but when we consider that this word is not formed from the English word system, but from the Greek συστήμα, or the latter Latin systema, we shall find that the accent is very properly placed on the second syllable according to the general rule. If we place the accent on the first, we ought to spell the word systemize, and then it would be analogically pronounced; but as our best writers and speakers have formed the word of the Greek and Latin plan, it ought to be written and pronounced as Mr. Mason has given it.

SYSTOLE, sîs'tô-lê, s. 96. In Anatomy, the contraction of the heart; in Grammar, the shortening of a long syllable.

TARGE, tårje, s. A poetical word for Target.

TARGET, tår'gét, s. 331. A kind of buckler or shield borne on the left arm.

☞ Mr. Pery and Mr. Barclay, are the only orthoëpists who make the g in this word soft; Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Nares, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Dyche, and that profound searcher into English sounds, Mr. Elphinston, make it hard, as in forget; and if etymology be any rule, the Erse word an targett is decidedly in favour of this pronunciation; for almost all our English words which have the g hard before e and i are of Erse or Saxon original. See Principles, No. 390, 581.

TARIFF, tår'f, s. 81. A cartel of commerce.

TAUGHT, tåwt, 213. 393. Pret. and part. pass. of Teach.

To TAUNT, tånt, or tåwnt, v. a. To reproach, to insult, to revile, to ridicule.

☞ I have every orthoëpist in the language against me in the preference I give to the first sound of this word, except Mr. Elphinston; and his authority as an analogist outweighs every other. I see no good reason that this word should have the broad sound of a, and not au, haut, saunt, jaunt, and the proper name Saunders; nor is my ear much accustomed to hear it so pronounced.—See Saunter, Haut, and Principles, No. 214.

TAUNT, tånt, s. 214. Insult, scoff, reproach.

TAUNTER, tånt'år, s. One who taunts, reproaches, or insults.

TAUTOPHONY, tåw-tó-fó-né, s. A successive repetition of the same sound.

↳ I have long wished to insert this word into my vocabulary, from a conviction of its utility in conversing on the sounds of words, but was deterred for want of an authority from any of our Dictionaries, when, upon reading the very learned and ingenious Essay on the Prosodies of the Greek and Latin Languages, I found the word used in exactly that manner, which shows the propriety, and even necessity of adopting it. The learned author says, "The most extraordinary tautophony which he [Eustathius] mentions, is that of the vowels α and η , in the proper names of the goddesses $\Upsilon\alpha\iota$ and $\Upsilon\eta\rho\alpha$." On the Prosodies of the Greek and Latin Languages. Printed for Robson, 1796.

TEN, tén, a. The decimal number, twice five.

TENABLE, tén'á-bl, a. Such as may be maintained against opposition, such as may be held against attacks.

The quantity of e in the first syllable of this word, and its relatives tenet, tenor, and tenure, is one of the most puzzling difficulties of pronunciation. How differently this letter is pronounced by different speakers may be gathered from a view of those orthoëpists who have marked the quantity of the vowels:

Sheridan,	ténable,	ténet,	ténor,	ténure.
Kenrick,	ténable,	ténét,	ténor,	ténure.
Nares,	ténable,	—	ténor,	ténure.
Ash,	ténable,	ténét,	ténor,	ténure.

Elphinston,	—	—	ténor,	—

From this survey of our Dictionaries we find them uniform only in the word tenor. They are nearly equally divided on the word tenet; and if similitude were to decide, it would be clearly in favour of the short vowel, in this word, as well as in tenor. They are both Latin words, and both have the vowel short in the original. This, however, is no reason with those who understand the analogy of English pronunciation, (for tremor, minor, &c. have the first vowel short in Latin) 594; but it sufficiently shows the partiality of the ear to the short vowel in words of this form, as is evident in the word tenent. The word tenable seems rather derived from the French tenable than the Latin teneo, and, being of a different form, comes under a different analogy. The termination able, though derived from the Latin abilis, is frequently annexed to mere English words, as pleasurable, pasturable, &c. and therefore makes no alteration in the accent or quantity of the word to which it is subjoined, 501. But as tenable must be considered as a simple in our language, the shortening power of the antepenultimate accent alone seems to determine the quantity of the first syllable of this word, which, like getable, probable, &c. has the short quantity of the original Latin to plead; a plea which seems to have some weight in words of this termination, where the antepenultimate accent appears to have less influence than in most of the other classes of words.—See Pl-cable. The word tenure seems inclined to lengthen the first vowel, in order to distinguish itself from tenor; and as there are no good reasons for shortening it, this reason seems sufficient to turn the balance in its favour, even if it had not an analogy and such a weight of usage on its side.

TENACIOUS, tén-ná-shús, a. 357. Grasping hard, inclined to hold fast, not willing to let go; retentive; having parts disposed to adhere to each other; cohesive.

TETHER, t²étsh-úr, s. 469. A string by which cattle are held from pasturing too wide.

↳ All our lexicographers seem to prefer this word to tether, except Barclay and Junius, who refer us from tether to tudder; and yet nothing can be clearer than its derivation from the Belgic word tudder, which Junius explains to be a rope by which horses or other cattle are tied to keep them from straying; and this, he says, undoubtedly comes from the Irish tead, a rope. While Skinner, without his usual judgment, derives it from the Latin tenor, because it restrains cattle from straying. But though tether is much more in use than tether, it is certainly not so legitimately formed, and ought not to have the preference.

TETRAGONAL, t²é-trá-gó-nál, a. 518. Square.

TETRARCH, t²é-trárk, or t²ét-trárk, s. A Roman governor of the fourth part of a province.

↳ Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Perry, are for the first pronunciation of this word, and Buchanan and Entick for the second. Let those who plead the Latin quantity for the short sound of e, peruse Principles, No. 544.

THANKSGIVING, thánk-sív-íng, s. Celebration of mercy.

THANKWORTHY, thánk-wúr-thé, a. Deserving gratitude.

THAT, thát, pron. dem. 50. Not this, but the other; it sometimes serves to save the repetition of a word or words foregoing; opposed to This, as the Other to One; when This and That relate to foregoing words, This is referred to the latter, and That to the former; such as; that which, what; the thing; by way of eminence.

↳ When this word is used as a pronoun demonstrative, it has always an accent on it, and is heard distinctly rhyming with hat, mat, &c. Thus in Pope's Essay on Criticism, v. 5.

"But of the two, less dang'rous is th' offence
 "To tire our patience, than mislead our sense,
 "Some few in that, but numbers err in this;
 "Ten censure wrong, for one who writes amiss."

Here the word that is as distinctly pronounced as any other accented word in the language.

THAT, thát, pron. rel. Which, relating to an antecedent thing; who, relating to an antecedent person.

↳ When this word is a relative pronoun, and is arranged in a sentence with other words, it never can have an accent, and is therefore much less distinctly pronounced than the foregoing word. In this case the a goes into that obscure sound it generally has when unaccented, 83, as may be heard in pronouncing it in the following passage from Pope's Essay on Criticism, v. 297.

"True wit is nature to advantage dress'd,
"What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd;
"Something, whose truth, convinc'd at sight, we find,
"That gives us back the image of our mind."

Here we find the a obscured as to approach nearly to short u; and, without any perceptible difference in the sound, the word might be written that, 92.

THAT, THÁT, conj. 50. 466. Because; noting a consequence; noting indication; noting a final end, in That, as being.

⇒ What has been observed of the pronunciation of this word, when a relative pronoun, is perfectly applicable to it when a conjunction; in either case it never has the accent, and necessarily goes into an obscure sound like short u. Thus in the following passage from Pope's Essay on Criticism:

"The vulgar thus through imitation err;
"As oft the learn'd, by being singular;
"So much they scorn the crowd, that if the throng
"By chance go right, they purposely go wrong."

Here the conjunction that is pronounced with exactly the same degree of obscurity as when a relative pronoun.

The word that, by being sometimes a demonstrative pronoun, sometimes a relative, and sometimes a conjunction, may produce a quadruple repetition of the same word, which, though not elegant, is strictly grammatical; a repetition which is, perhaps, peculiar to the English language. This is humorously exemplified by Mr. Steele in the Spectator, No. 80, in the Just Remonstrance of affronted That, where he brings in this word, declaring how useful it had been to a great orator, who, in a speech to the lords, had said, "My Lords, with humble submission, that that I say, is; that that that that gentleman has advanced is not that that he should have proved to your Lordships." In the pronunciation of this passage, it is plain that the word that, which is not printed in italicks, is pronounced nearly as if written that. I am sensible of the delicacy of the obscure sound of this a, and therefore do not offer u as a perfect equivalent, but as the nearest approach to it, and as the means of pointing out the power of the accent and its importance in ascertaining the sense; for if all these words were pronounced equally distinct, it is plain the sense would be obscured: and so liable are the relative, the conjunction, and the demonstrative, to be confounded, that some writers have distinguished the latter by printing it in italicks. Those who wish to see the most profound and ingenious investigation of the grammatical origin of these words, must consult Horne Tooke's Diversions of Parley.

THATCH, thátsh, s. 466. Straw laid upon the top of a house to keep out the weather.

To THATCH, thátsh, v. a. To cover as with straw.

THATCHER, thátsh'úr, s. One who covers houses with straw.

To THAW, thâw, v. n. 466. To grow liquid after congelation, to melt; to remit the cold which had caused frost.

To THAW, thâw, v. a. To melt what was congealed.

THAW, thâw, s. Liquefaction of any thing congealed; warmth, such as liquefies congelation.

THE, THÉ, or THÈ, art. 466. The article noting a particular thing; before a vowel, E is commonly cut off in verse.

⇒ Mr. Sheridan has given us these two modes of pronouncing this word, but has not told us when we are to use one, and when the other. To supply this deficiency, therefore, it may be observed, that when the is prefixed to a word beginning with a consonant; it has a short sound, little more than the sound of th without the e; and when it precedes a word beginning with a vowel, the e is sounded plainly and distinctly. This difference will be perceptible by comparing the pen, the hand, &c. with the oil, the air, &c.; or the difference of this word before ancients and moderns in the following couplet of Pope:

"Some foreign writers, some our own despise;
"The ancients only, or the moderns prize."

A very imperfect way of pronouncing this word frequently arises in verse, where the poet, for the preservation of the metre, cuts off e by an apostrophe, and unites the articles to the following word. This pronunciation depraves the sound of the verse without necessity, as the syllable formed by e is so short as to admit of being sounded with the preceding syllable, so as not to increase the number of syllables to the ear, or to hurt the melody.

"'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill
"Appear in writing, or in judging ill:
"But of the two, less dang'rous is th' offence
"To tire our patience, than mislead our sense."
Pope.

".....Him, th' Almighty Power
"Hurl'd, headlong flaming, from th' ethereal sky,
"With hideous ruin and combustion, down
"To bottomless perdition, there to dwell
"In adamantine chains and penal fire,
"Who durst defy th' Omnipotent to arms."
Milton

In these examples we see the particle the may either form a distinct syllable, or not. In the third line from Pope the first the forms a distinct syllable, but the second is sunk into the succeeding noun. The same may be observed of this particle in the first, second, and sixth lines of the passage from Milton: but what appears strange is, that though the particle the before a vowel, and shortened by an apostrophe, does not augment the number of syllables, it is really pronounced longer than where it forms a syllable, and is not thus shortened by elision. This is apparent in the third line from Pope,

"But of the two, less dang'rous is th' offence."

The reason that the first the, though pronounced shorter than the second, forms a syllable, and the second does not, seems to arise from the coalescence of the vowels, which, though lengthened in sound, may still be pronounced with one impulse of the breath. Thus, when a consonant follows the particle the, we find two distinct impulses, though the e is dropped; but when a vowel follows the, the impulse on the particle slides over, as it were, to the consonant of the succeeding syllable, without forming two distinct impulses, nearly as if a y were interposed, and the words were written th'Yoffence, th'Yomnipotent, &c.

I would not, however, be supposed to disapprove of the practice of eliding the e before a vowel to the eye when the verse requires it; this practice is founded on good sense; and the first line in the passage from Milton shows the necessity of making the distinction, when it is, and when it is not, to be elided; what I wish to reform is, the practice of shortening the e to the ear, and thus micing and impoverishing the sound of the verse without necessity.

THWACK, thwák, s. 85. A hard blow.

THWART, thwárt, a. 85. 466. Transverse, cross to something else; perverse, inconvenient, mischievous.

To THWART, thwárt, v. a. To cross, to lie or come cross any thing to cross, to oppose, to traverse.

To THWART, thwárt, v. n. To be opposite.

THWARTINGLY, thwárt-ing-lé, ad. Oppositely, with opposition.

THY, THU, or THE, pron. 466. Of thee, belonging to thee.

↳ From what has been already observed under the pronoun my, we are naturally led to suppose, that the word thy, when not emphatical, ought to follow the same analogy, and be pronounced like the, as we frequently hear it on the stage; but if we reflect, that reading or reciting is a perfect picture of speaking, we shall be induced to think that, in this particular, the Stage is wrong. The second personal pronoun thy is not like my, the common language of every subject; it is used only where the subject is either raised above common life, or sunk below it into the mean and familiar. When the subject is elevated above common life, it adopts a language suitable to such an elevation, and the pronunciation of this language ought to be as far removed from the familiar as the language itself. Thus, in prayer, pronouncing thy like the, even when unemphatical, would be intolerable; while suffering thy, when unemphatical, to slide into the in the pronunciation of slight and familiar composition, seems to lower the sound to the language, and form a proper distinction between different subjects. If, therefore, it should be asked why, in reciting epic or tragic composition, we ought always to pronounce thy rhyming with high, while my, when unemphatical, sinks into the sound of me, it may be answered, because my is the common language of every subject, while thy is confined to subjects either elevated above common life, or sunk below it into the negligent and familiar. When, therefore, the language is elevated, the uncommonness of the word thy, and its full sound rhyming with high, is suitable to the dignity of the subject: but the slender sound, like the, gives it a familiarity only suitable to the language of endearment or negligence, and for this very reason is unfit for the dignity of epic or tragic composition. Thus in the following passages from Milton:

"Say first, for heav'n hides nothing from thy view,
"Nor the deep tract of hell"

Par Lost, I

"O thou, that with surpassing glory crown'd,
"Looks't from thy sole dominion like the God
"Of this new world; at whose sight all the stars
"Hide their diminished heads; to thee I call,
"But with no friendly voice; and add thy name,
"O sun, to tell thee how I hate thy beams."

Ibid. IV

Here, pronouncing the pronoun thy, like the word the, would familiarize and debase the language to prose. The same may be observed of the following passage from the tragedy of Cato:

"Now, Caesar, let thy troops beset our gates,
"And bar each avenue; thy gathering fleets
"O'er spread the sea, and stop up every port;
"Cato shall open to himself a passage,
"And mock thy hopes.".....

Here the impropriety of pronouncing thy like the is palpable: nor would it be much more excusable in the following speech of Portius, in the first scene of the same tragedy:

"Thou see'st not that thy brother is thy rival;
"But I must hide it, for I know thy temper.
"Now, Marcus, 'twas thy virtue's on the proof;
"Put forth thy utmost strength, work every nerve,
"And call up all thy father in thy soul.".....

As this pronoun is generally pronounced on the stage, it would be difficult for the ear to distinguish whether the words are,

"Thou know'st not that thy brother is thy rival," or, "Thou know'st not, that the brother is the rival." &c

And this may be one reason that the slender pronunciation of thy should be avoided as much as possible.

Perhaps it will be urged, that though these passages require thy to be pronounced so as to rhyme with high, there are other instances in tragedy where the subject is low and familiar, which would be better pronounced by sounding thy like the: to which it may be answered, that when tragedy lowers her voice, and descends into the mean and familiar, as is frequently the case in the tragedies of Shakespeare, the slender pronunciation of thy may be adopted, because, though the piece may have the name of a tragedy, the scene may be really comedy. The only rule, therefore, that can be given, is a very indefinite one; namely, that thy ought always to be pronounced so as to rhyme with high when the subject is raised, and the personage dignified; but when the subject is familiar, and the person we address without dignity or importance, if thy be the personal pronoun made use of; it ought to be pronounced like the: thus, if, in a familiar way, we say to a friend, Give me thy hand, we never hear the pronoun thy sounded so as to rhyme with high: and it is always pronounced like the when speaking to a child; we say, Mind thy book, Hold up thy head, or, Take off thy hat. The phraseology we call theeing and thouing, is not so common use with us as the tutoyant among the French: but as the second personal pronoun thou, and its possessive thy, are indispensable in composition, it seems of some importance to pronounce them properly.—See Rhetorical Grammar, page 32.

THYSELF, thî-sêlf, pron. rec. It is commonly used in the oblique cases or following the verb; in poetical or solemn language it is sometimes used in the nominative.

TIPE, tîêr, s. Rank, row.—See Tier.

TIRE As this word, when it signifies a rank or row, is universally pronounced like tier, a drop from the eye it ought always to be written tier; which would prevent a gross irregularity. This is the more to be wished, not only as its derivation from the old French tiere seems to require this spelling, but to distinguish it from the word tire, a headdress; which, probably, being a corruption either of the word tiara, an ornament for the head, or of the English word attire, ought to be written and pronounced like the word tire, to fatigue. Dr. Kenrick is the only orthoëpist who has attended to this distinction.—See Bowl.

TIRE, tîre, s. A headdress; furniture; apparatus.

To TIRE, tîre, v. a. To fatigue, to make weary, to harass; to dress the head.

TIVY, tiv-é, a. A word expressing speed, from Tantivy, the note of a hunting horn.

To, tó, ad. A particle coming between two verbs, and noting the second as the object of the first; it notes the intention, as she raised a war To call me back; after an adjective it notes its object, as born To beg; noting futurity, as, we are still To seek; To and again, To and fro, backward and forward.

What has been observed of the word The, respecting the length of the e before a vowel, and its shortness before a consonant, is perfectly applicable to the preposition, and the adverb To. This will be palpable in the pronunciation of the verbs to begin and to end, and in the phrases, I went to London, he went to Eaton. It may be observed too, that this word, though deprived of its o to the eye, always preserves it to the ear. Whether we see it elided, as in Pope's Essay on the Mar:

"Say what the use were finer optics giv'n,
"T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n."

Or preserved with an apostrophe after it, as in Milton:

"For still they knew, and ought to have still remember'd,
"The high injunction not to taste that fruit,
"Whoever tempted."

In both these instances the word to ought to be pronounced in exactly the same manner; that is, like the number two.

To, tó, prep. Noting motion toward, opposed to From; noting accord or adaptation; noting address or compellation, as, here's To you all; noting a state or place whither any one goes, as, away To horse; noting opposition, as, foot To foot; noting amount, as, To the number of three hundred; noting proportion, as, Three to nine; noting perception, as, sharp To the taste; in comparison of, as, no fool To the sinner; as far as; toward.—See the Adverb.

TOUPET, tóó-pét, s. 315. A curl, an artificial lock of hair. This word is generally written and pronounced Toopee.

TOUR, tóor, s. 315. Ramble, roving journey; turn, revolution.

☞ My experience fails me if this word is not slowly conforming to the true English sound of the vowels heard in thou. The smart traveller to France and Italy would fear we should never suppose he had been out of England, were he not to pronounce it so as to rhyme with poor; and the sober English critic sees infinite advantage in this pronunciation, as it prevents our mistaking taking a tour for taking a tover. But plausible as this latter reason may be, it is far from being sufficient to induce a philosophical grammarian to approve it. Coincidence in the sound of words signifying different things, is the case in all languages; but while these words are differently written, their different meanings will be sufficiently preserved without departing from the general analogy of pronunciation.—See the word Bowl.

TOURNAMENT, tóór'ná-mént, or túr'ná-mént, }
TOURNEY, tóór'né, or túr'né, }
s. Till, military sport, mock encounter; Milton uses it simply for encounter.

☞ I am much mistaken if general usage does not incline to the short sound of the diphthong in these words; and that this sound ought to be indulged, is palpable to every English ear; which finds a repugnance at giving the French sound to any word that is not newly adopted. Journey, nourish, courage, and many other words from the French, have long been anglicised; and there is no good reason that this word should not fall into the same class. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Perry, give the first sound of this word; and Buchanan and W. Johnston, the second. Junius and Skinner spell the word Tournament.

To TOURNEY, tóór'né, or túr'né, v. n. To tilt in the lists.

TOURNIQUET, túr'né-kwét, s. A bandage used in amputations, straitened or relaxed by the turn of a handle.

☞ The general pronunciation of this word ought to induce us to the second pronunciation of Tournament.

To TOUSE, tóúze, v. a. 313. To pull, to tear, to haul, to drag; whence Touser, or Towser, the name of a mastiff.

TOW, tó, s. Flax or hemp beaten and combed into a filamentous substance.

To TOW, tó, v. a. To draw by a rope particularly through the water.

TOWARD, tó'árd, 324. } prep.

TOWARDS, tó'árdz, }
In a direction to; near to, as the danger now comes Towards him; with respect to, touching, regarding; with tendency to; nearly, little less than.

☞ Notwithstanding our poets almost universally accent this word on the first syllable, and the poets are pretty generally followed by good speakers, there are some, and those not of the lowest order, who still place the accent on the second. These should be reminded, that as inwards, outwards, backwards, forwards, and every other word of the same form, have the accent on the first syllable, there is not the least reason for pronouncing towards with the accent on the last. All our orthoëpists place the accent upon the first syllable of toward when an adjective. Towards, being always a preposition, has the accent on the first syllable by Mr. Scott; but Mr. Perry, Barclay, and Fenning, place it on the second. From the coalescence of the o with the w, this word is pronounced generally in one syllable, to 559. Fâte 73, fâr 77, fâl 83, fât 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pline 105, pin 107—nô 162, môve 164, though Dr. Kenrick says otherwise. Mr. Sheridan so pronounces it; Mr. Nares and Mr. Smith rhyme it with boards: Bailey accents the first syllable of toward, and Entick the same syllable on the same word, and on towards as a preposition.

TRAFFICKER, trâ¹-fik-kûr, s. Trader, merchant.

TRAGEDIAN, trâ¹-jê¹-dê-ân, s. A writer of tragedy; an actor of tragedy.

☞ In this word we have a striking instance of the aversion of the language to what may be called a Tautophony, or a successive repetition of the same sound. We find no repugnance at aspirating the d in comedian, and pronouncing it as if written co-me-je-an; but there is no ear that would not be hurt at pronouncing tragedian as if written tra-je-je-an. The reason is evident. The ge that immediately precedes being exactly the same sound as d when aspirated into je, the ear will not suffer the repetition, and therefore dispenses with the laws of aspiration, rather than offend against those of harmony. To the same reason we must attribute giving the sound of zh to the double s in abscission, and to the ti in transition. The same aversion to the repetition of similar sounds makes us drop the first aspiration in diphthong, triphthong, ophthalm, &c.—See Ophthalmick.

☞ I prefer the first mode of pronouncing this word to the second, though, at first sight, it appears not so regular. My reason is, the aversion our language has to a repetition of exactly similar sounds. The s in the prefix trans is always sharp and hissing, and that inclines us to vary the succeeding aspiration, by giving it the flat instead of the sharp sound. This is the best reason I can give for the very prevailing custom of pronouncing this termination in this word contrary to analogy. When I asked Mr. Garrick to pronounce this word, he, without premeditation, gave it in the first manner; but when I desired him to repeat his pronunciation; he gave it in the second:

"As one who in his journey bates at noon,
"Though bent on speed, so here th' Archangel paus'd,
"Betwixt the world's destroy'd and world restor'd,
"If Adam ought perhaps might interpose,
"Then with transition sweet new speech resumes."
Milton.

I think, however, it may be classed among those varieties where we shall neither be much applauded for being right, nor blamed for being wrong.

TRAVERSE, trá-vér-se, ad. Crosswise, athwart.

In the folio edition of Johnson the word traverse, when an adverb or a preposition is accented on the last syllable as I have marked it; but in the quarto, it is every where accented on the first. Mr. Sheridan accents only the preposition on the last. Dr. Ash says the verb was formerly accented on the last; and Buchanan has given it so accented: all the rest of our orthoepists accented the word every where on the first; but the distinction in which I have followed Dr. Johnson's folio, I must think the most accurate.

".....He through the armed files
"Darts his experient'd eye, and soon traverse,
"The whole battalion views.".....
Milton.

TRIGONAL, trî²gô-nâl, a. Triangular, having three corners.

☞ I have made the first syllable of this word short, as I am convinced it is agreeable to the genius of English pronunciation to shorten every antepenultimate vowel except u, when not followed by a diphthong, 535. This is evident in tripartite, triplicate, and a thousand other words, notwithstanding the specific meaning of the first syllable, which, in words of two syllables when the accent is on the first, and in polysyllables, when the accent is on the second, ought, according to analogy, to have the i long. See Principles, No. 530. 535.

TRIPOD, trî²pôd, or trî²p-ôd, s. 544. A seat with three feet, such as that from which the priestess of Apollo delivered oracles.

☞ The first mode of pronouncing this word is that which is adopted by Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Bailey, Buchanan, and Perry; and the second, by Dr. Ash, Mr. Nares, Mr. Scott, Entick, and Fry. I do not hesitate to pronounce the former the most agreeable to English analogy; not only because the prefixes, bi and tri, when no other law forbids, ought to be made as distinct as possible, but because all words of two syllables with the accent on the first, and having one consonant between two vowels, ought, if custom does not absolutely forbid, to have the vowel in the first syllable long. This is the genuine English analogy; the mode in which we pronounce all Latin words of this form, let the quantity be what it will, 544; and the mode in which we should have pronounced all English words of this form, if an affectation of Latinity had not often prevented us. For the same reason, therefore, that we pronounce bipect, trigon, and trident, with the i long, we ought to adopt the first pronunciation of the word in question, and not the second.—See Drama.

TRIPOLY, trî²p-pô-lê, s. A sharp cutting sand.

To TRIUMPH, trī-ūmf, v. n. To celebrate a victory with pomp, to rejoice for victory; to obtain victory; to insult upon an advantage gained.

→ This verb, says Mr. Nares, was, even till Dryden's time, pronounced with the accent either on the first or last syllable. Accenting the last, was according to the general rule. See Principles, No. 509, n. But it is now, as Mr. Nares observes, invariably accented on the first, notwithstanding the analogy I have remarked, and the general propensity to give a dissyllable noun and verb a different accentuation. 492.

To TWEAK, twéke, v. a. 227. To pinch, to squeeze betwixt the fingers.

To TWEEDLE, twéédld, v. a. 246. To handle lightly.

↳ This word seems formed from the sound of certain soft lengthened notes upon the fiddle, and therefore very properly used by Addison, in the sense of wheelie, but with additional propriety and humour; where he says, "A fiddler had brought in with him a body of lusty young fellows, whom he had tweedled into the service." The sarcastic couplet of Swift,

"'Tis strange there should such difference be,
"Twixt tweedle dum and tweedle dee."

seems to confirm the opinion I have ventured to give of the original formation of this whimsical word.

VARIANCE, vâ-rê-ânse, s. Discord, disagreement, dissension.

VARIATION, vâ-rê-â-shûn, s. Change, mutation, difference from itself; difference, change from one to another; successive change; in Grammar, change of termination of nouns; deviation; Variation of the compass, deviation of the magnetick needle from parallel with the meridian.

↪ The a in the first syllable of this word, from the lengthening power of the succeeding vowels, continues long and slender, as in various. The same may be observed of variegation. Mr. Sheridan has given a in these two words the short sound of the Italian a, but contrary to the analogy of English pronunciation. See Principles, No. 334.

To VARIEGATE, vâ-rê-ê-gate, v. a. To diversify; to stain with different colours.

↪ All our orthoëpists are uniform in placing the accent on the first syllable of this word, and all sound the a as in vary, except Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Perry, and Buchanan, who give it the short sound as in carry.

That so great a master of English analogy as Mr. Elphinston should here overlook the lengthening power of the vocal assemblage ie, is not a little surprising. See Principles, No. 196.

VARIEGATION, vâ-rê-ê-gâ-shûn, s. Diversity of colours.

VARIETY, vâ-rê-ê-tê, s. Change, succession of one thing to another, intermixture; one thing of many by which variety is made; difference, dissimilitude; variation, deviation, change from a former state.

VARIOUS, vâ-rê-üs, a. 314. Different, several, manifold; changeable, uncertain, unfixed; unlike each other; variegated, diversified.

VARIOUSLY, vâ-rê-üs-lê, ad. In a various manner.

VARLET, vâ-r-lê't, s. Anciently a servant or footman; a scoundrel, a rascal.

VARLETRY, vâ-r-lê't-trê, s. Rabble, crowd, populace.

VARNISH, vâ-r-nish, s. A matter laid upon wood, metal, or other bodies, to make them shine; cover, palliation.

To VARNISH, vâ-r-nish, v. a. To cover with something shining; to cover, to conceal with something ornamental; to palliate, to hide with colour of rhetoric.

VARNISHER, vâ-r-nish-ür, s. One whose trade is to varnish; a dissembler, an adorer.

To VARY, vâ-rê, v. a. To change, to make unlike itself; to change to something else; to make of different kinds; to diversify, to variegate.

To VARY, vâ-rê, v. n. To be changeable, to appear in different forms, to be unlike each other; to alter, to become unlike itself; to deviate, to depart; to succeed each other; to disagree, to be at variance; to shift colours.

VARY, vâ-rê, s. Change, alteration. Obsolete.

VASCULAR, vâs-kû-lâr, a. 88. Consisting of vessels, full of vessels.

VASE, vâze, s. A vessel rather for ornament than use.

↪ Mr. Sheridan has pronounced this word so as to rhyme with base, case, &c. I have uniformly heard it pronounced with the s like z, and sometimes, by people of refinement, with the a like av; but this, being too refined for the general ear, is now but seldom heard.

Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Smith, Mr. Perry, and Buchanan, pronounce the a long and slender as I have done, but with the s as in case: Mr. Smith and W. Johnston give the a the same sound, and the s the sound of z; and Mr. Elphinston sounds it as if written vazz: but this, as Mr. Nares justly observes, is an affected pronunciation.

VASSAL, vâs-sâl, s. 88. One who holds by the will of a superior lord; a subject, a dependent; a servant, one who acts by the will of another; a slave, a low wretch.

VASSALLAGE, vâs-sâl-âje, s. 90. The state of a vassal, tenure at will, servitude, slavery.

VAST, vâst, a. 79. Large, great; vitiously great, enormously extensive.

VAST, vâst, s. An empty waste.

VASTATION, vâs-tâ-shûn, s. Waste, depopulation.

VASTIDITY, vâs-tid'-ê-tê, s. Wideness, immensity.

VASTLY, vâst-lê, ad. Greatly, to a great degree.

VASTNESS, vâst-nês, s. Immensity, enormous greatness.

VASTY, vâst-lê, a. Large.

VAT, vât, s. A vessel in which liquors are kept in an immature state.

VATICIDE, vât-ê-side, s. 143. A murderer of poets.

To VATICINATE, vâ-tis'-sê-nâte, v. n. To prophesy, to practise prediction.

VAULT, vâwlt, or vâwt, s. 405. A continued arch; a cellar; a cave, a cavern; a repository for the dead.

↪ Mr. Sheridan leaves out the l in this word, in the word vault, to leap, and all their compounds; but my ear grossly deceives me if this l is ever suppressed, except in the sense of a cellar for wine, &c. In this l am supported by all our orthoëpists, from whom the sounds of the letter can be gathered; and Mr. Scott and Mr. Perry preserve the l in every word of this form. This, I think, is not agreeable to general usage with respect to the exception I have given; though I think it might be dispensed with for the sake of uniformity, especially as the old French voulte, the Italian volta, and the lower Latin voluta, from which the word is derived, have all of them the l; nor do I think the preservation of it in the word in question would incur the least imputation of pedantry.

To VAULT, vāvlt, v. a. To arch, to shape as a vault; to cover with an arch.

To VAULT, vāvlt, v. n. To leap, to jump; to play the tumbler or postur-master.

VAULT, vāvlt, s. A leap, or jump.

VAULTAGE, vāvlt'ídje, s. 90. Arched cellar.

VAULTED, vāvlt'éd, a. Arched, concave.

VAULTER, vāvlt'úr, s. 98. A leaper, a jumper, a tumbler.

VAULTY, vāvlt'té, a. Arched, concave.

To VAUNT, vāvnt, v. a. 216. To boast, to display with ostentation.

Mr. Nares is the only orthoëpist who gives the diphthong in this word and avaunt the same sound as in avant; but a few more such respectable judges, by setting the example, would reduce these words to their proper class; till then the whole army of lexicographers and speakers, particularly on the stage, must be submitted to, 214.

To VAUNT, vāvnt, v. n. To play the braggart, to talk with ostentation.

VAUNT, vāvnt, s. Brag, boast, vain ostentation.

VAUNT, vāvnt, s. 214. The first part. Not in use.

VAUNTER, vāvnt'úr, s. Boaster, braggart.

VAUNTFUL, vāvnt'fúl, a. Boastful, ostentatious.

VAUNTINGLY, vāvnt'ing-lé, ad. Boastfully, ostentatiously.

VAWARD, vāv'wård, s. 88. Fore part.

UBERTY, yú'bér-té, s. Abundance, fruitfulness.

UBIETY, yú-bí'é-té, s. Local relation, whereness.

UBIQUITARY, yú-bík-wé-tá-ré, a. Existing every where.

UBIQUITY, yú-bík-wé-té, s. Omnipresence, existence at the same time in all places.

UDDER, ú'd'dúr, s. 98. The breast or dugs of a cow, or other large animal.

VEAL, véle, s. The flesh of a calf killed for the table.

VECTION, vék'shún, } s.

VECTITATION, vék-té tá'shún, } s.

The act of carrying, or being carried.

VECTURE, vék'tshúre, s. 461. Carriage.

To VEER, vére, v. n. To turn about.

To VEER, vére, v. a. To let out; to turn, to change.

VEGETABILITY, véd-jé-tá-bíl'é-té, s. Vegetable nature.

VEGETABLE, véd'jé-tá-bl, s. Any thing that has growth without sensation, as plants.

VEGETABLE, véd'jé-tá-bl, a. Belonging to a plant; having the nature of plants.

To VEGETATE, véd'jé-táte, v. n. To grow, as plants, to shoot out, to grow without sensation.

VEGETATION, véd-jé-tá'shún, s. The power of producing the growth of plants; the power of growth without sensation.

VEGETATIVE, véd'jé-tá-tív, a. 512. Having the quality of growing without life; having the power to produce growth in plants.

VEGETATIVENESS, véd'jé-tá-tív-nés, s. The quality of producing growth.

VEGETE, vé-jéte, a. Vigorous, active, sprightly.

VEGETIVE, véd'jé-tív, a. Vegetable.

VEGETIVE, véd'jé-tív, s. A vegetable.

VEHEMENCE, vé'hé-ménse, } s.

VEHEMENCY, vé'hé-mén-sé, } s.

Violence, force; ardour, mental violence, fervour.

VEHEMENT, vé'hé-mént, a. Violent, forcible ardent, eager, fervent.

VEHEMENTLY, vé'hé-mént-lé, ad. Forcibly;

pathetically, urgently.

VEHICLE, vé'hé-kl, s. 405. That in which any thing is carried; that part of a medicine which serves to make the principal ingredient potable; that by means of which any thing is conveyed.

To VEIL, vále, v. n. 240. To cover with a veil, or any thing which conceals the face; to cover, invest; to hide, to conceal.

VEIL, vále, s. A cover to conceal the face; a cover, a disguise.

VEIN, váne, s. 240. The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it; hollow, cavity; course of metal in the mine; tendency or turn of the mind or genius; favourable moment; humour, temper; continued disposition; current, continued production; strain, quality; streak, variegation.

VEINED, vánd, 359. } a.

Full of veins; streaked, variegated.

VELLEITY, vé'l-lé'é-té, s. The lowest degree of desire.

To VELLICATE, vé'l-lé-káte, v. a. To twitch, to pluck, to act by stimulation.

VELLICATION, vé'l-lé-ká'shún, s. Twitching, stimulation.

VELLUM, vé'l'lúm, s. The skin of a calf dressed for the writer.

VELOCITY, vé-lós'é-té, s. Speed, swiftness, quick motion.

VELVET, vé'l-vít, s. 99. Silk with a short fur of pile upon it.

VELVET, vé'l-vít, a. Made of velvet; soft, delicate.

VELURE, vé-lúre, s. Velvet. An old word.

VENAL, vé'nál, a. 88. Mercenary, prostitute; contained in the veins.

VENALITY, vé'nál'é-té, s. Mercenariness, prostitution.

VENATICK, vé-nát'ík, a. 509. Used in hunting.

VENATION, vé-ná'shún, s. The act or practice of hunting.

To VEND, vénd, v. a. To sell, to offer to sale.

VENDEE, vén-déé, s. One to whom any thing is sold.

VENDER, vénd'úr, s. 98. A seller.

VENDIBLE, vénd'é-bl, a. 405. Saleable, marketable.

VENDIBLENESS, vénd'é-bl-nés, s. The state of being saleable.

VENDITATION, vén-dé-tá'shún, s. Boastful display.

VENDITION, vén-dísh'ún, s. Sale, the act of selling.

To VENEER, vé-néer, v. a. To make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work.

This word is, by cabinet-makers, pronounced fener; but here, as in similar cases, the scholar will lose no credit by pronouncing the word as it is written. See Boatswain.

VENEFICE, vén'é-fís, s. 142. The practice of poisoning.

VENEFICIAL, vén'é-físh'ál, a. Acting by poison, bewitching.

VENEFICIOUSLY, vén'é-físh'ús-lé, ad. By poison.

VENEMOUS, vén'é-mús, a. Poisonous.

To VENENATE, vén'é-náte, v. a. To poison, to infect with poison.

559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fät 81—mē 93, mēt 95—pline 105, pīn 107—nō 162, mōve 164,

☞ In the first edition of this Dictionary I accented this word on the first syllable, contrary to the example of Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, and Mr. Sheridan; but, upon a revival of the various analogies of accentuation, was inclined to think this accentuation somewhat doubtful. The word veneno, from which this is formed, has the penultimate long; and in verbs of this termination, derived from the Latin, and preserving the same number of syllables, we often preserve the same accent, as in arietate, cocervate, denigrate, &c.; but this is so often neglected in favour of the antepenultimate accent, as in decorate, defatigate, delegate, desolate, &c. that general usage seems evidently leaning to this side; and as in perpetrate and emigrate, from perpetro and emigro, where the penultimate vowel is doubtful, we always place the accent on the antepenultimate; so in this and similar words, where custom does not decide, I would always recommend a similar accentuation. See Principles, No. 503, n.

VENENATION, ven-ē-nā-shūn, s. Poison, venom.

VENENE, vē-nēnē, } a.

VENENOSE, ven-ē-nōse, 427. } a. Poisonous, venomous.

VENERABLE, ven-ēr-ā-bl, a. 405. 555. To be regarded with awe, to be treated with reverence.

VENERABLY, ven-ēr-ā-blē, ad. In a manner that excites reverence.

To VENERATE, ven-ēr-āte, v. a. To reverence, to treat with veneration, to regard with awe.

GENERATION, ven-ēr-ā-shūn, s. Reverent regard, awful respect.

VENERATOR, ven-ēr-ā-tūr, s. 521. Reverencer.

VENEREAL, vē-nē-rē-āl, a. Relating to love; to a certain disorder; consisting of copper, called Venus by chymists.

VENEREOUS, vē-nē-rē-ūs, a. Libidinous, lustful.

VENERY, ven-ēr-ē, s. 555. The sport of hunting. Little used in this sense. The commerce of the sexes.

VENEY, vē-nē, s. A bout, a turn. Out of use.

VENESECTON, vē-nē-sēk-shūn, s. Blood-letting, the act of opening a vein, phlebotomy.

To VENGE, vēnje, v. a. To avenge, to punish.

VENGEANCE, vēnj-ānse, s. 244. Punishment, penal retribution, avengement; it is used in familiar language, to do with a Vengeance, is to do with vehemence; what a Vengeance, emphatically What?

VENGEFUL, vēnje-ful, a. Vindictive, revengeful.

VENIAL, vē-nē-ā-bl, } a.

VENIAL, vē-nē-āl, 28. } a. Pardonable, susceptible of pardon, excusable; permitted, allowed.

VENIALNESS, vē-nē-āl-nēs, s. State of being excusable.

VENISON, ven-īzn, or ven-ē-zn, s. Game, beast of chase, the flesh of deer.

☞ A shameful corruption of this word by entirely striking the i, has reduced it to two syllables. Mr. Sheridan pronounces it in three; Dr. Kenrick gives it in three, but tells us it is usually heard in two. Mr. Scott gives it both ways; Mr. Perry only as it is contracted; and Mr. Elphinstone supposes the i in this word, as much lost as in business.

It is highly probable this corruption is of long standing; for though Shakespeare, in As You Like It, 627s,

"Come, shall we go and kill us venison!"

Yet Chapman pronounces this word in two syllables,

"To our venison's store

"We added wile till we could wish no more."

And Dryden after him,

"He for the feast prepar'd

"In equal portions with the ven'son shar'd."

To these instances we may add an excellent poet of our own time;

"Gorgonius sits abdominous and wan,

"Like a fat squab upon a Chinese fan;

"He snuffs far off th' anticipated joy;

"Turtle and ven'son all his thoughts employ."

Poetry will ever consider this word, like many others, either as of two or three syllables; but solemn prose, such as the language of Scripture, will always give the word its due length. For however we may be accustomed to hear ven'son in common conversation, what disgust would it not give us to hear this word in the pulpit, when Isaac says to his son:

"Now therefore take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver, and thy bow, and go out to the field, and take me some ven'son!"

In short, my opinion is, that this word, in spite of the general corruption, ought always to be pronounced in three syllables by correct speakers, and that the contraction should be left to the poets.

VENOM, ven-ūm, s. 166. Poison.

VENOMOUS, ven-ūm-ūs, a. Poisonous, malignant, mischievous.

VENOMOUSLY, ven-ūm-ūs-lē, ad. Poisonously, mischievously, malignantly.

VENOMOUSNESS, ven-ūm-ūs-nēs, s. Poisonousness, malignity.

VENT, vēnt, s. A small aperture, a hole; a spracle; passage out from secrecy to publick notice; the act of opening; emission, passage; discharge, means of discharge; sale.

To VENT, vēnt, v. a. To let out at a small aperture; to let out, to give way to; to utter, to report; to emit, to pour out; to publish; to sell, to carry to sale.

VENTAGE, vēnt-tidje, s. 90. One of the small holes of a flute.

VERB, vērb, s. A part of speech signifying existence or some modification thereof, as action, mission.

VERBAL, vër-bál-ál, a. 88. Spoken, not written; oral, uttered by mouth; consisting in mere words; literal, having word answering to word; a Verbal noun is a noun used as a verb.

To VERBALIZE, vër-bál-lze, v. n. To use many words, to retract a discourse.

↳ This word is certainly useful in this sense, as we have no other active or neuter verb to express being verbose; but there is another sense in which it may be no less useful, and that is, when we want to express the forming of a noun into a verb, as from arm, to arm, &c.

VERBALITY, vër-bál-é-té, s. Mere bare words.

VERBALLY, vër-bál-é, ad. In words, orally; word for word.

VERBATIM, vër-bá-tim, ad. Word for word.

To VERBERATE, vër-bér-áte, v. a. 94. To beat, to strike.

VERBERATION, vër-bér-ál-shún, s. Blows, beating.

VERBOSE, vër-bóse, a. 427. Exuberant in words, prolix, tedious by multiplicity of words.

VERDANT, vër-dánt, a. Green.

VERDERER, vër-dér-úr, s. 555. An officer in the forest.

VERDICT, vër-díkt, s. The determination of the jury declared to the judge; declaration, decision, judgment, opinion.

VERDIGRIS, vër-dé-grés, s. 112. The rust of brass.

↳ I have in this word corrected Dr. Johnson, by comparing him with himself. If Ambergis is spelt without the final e, this letter certainly ought not to be in Verdegriis, as both words derive their last syllable from exactly the same origin.

VERDITURE, vër-dé-túre, s. The faintest and palest green.

VERDURE, vër-júre, s. 461. 376. Green, green colour.

VERDUROUS, vër-jú-rús, a. 314. Green, covered with green.

VERECUND, vër-é-kúnd, a. Modest, bashful. See Fucund.

VERGE, vërje, s. A rod, or something in form of a rod, carried as an emblem of authority; the mace of a dean; the brink, the edge, the utmost border; in Law, verge is the compass about the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household.

To VERGE, vërje, v. n. To tend, to bend downward.

VERGER, vër-júr, s. 98. He who carries the mace before the dean.

VERIDICAL, vè-rid-é-kál, a. Telling truth.

VERIFICATION, vër-é-fé-kál-shún, s. Confirmation by argument, evidence.

To VERIFY, vër-é-fl, v. a. To justify against the charge of falsehood, to confirm, to prove true.

VERILY, vër-é-lé, ad. In truth, certainly; with great confidence.

VERISIMILAR, vër-é-sím-é-lúr, a. 88. Probable, likely.

VERISIMILITUDE, vër-é-sím-míl-é-túde, } s.

VERISIMILITY, vër-é-sím-míl-é-té, } s.

VERITY, vër-é-té, s. Truth, consonance to the reality of things; a true assertion; a true tenet; moral truth, agreement of the words with the thoughts.

VERUICE, vër-jús, s. Acid liquor expressed from crab-apples.

VERMICELLI, vër-mé-tshé-lé, s. A paste rolled and broken in the form of worms.

↳ This word is perfectly Italian, and may be pardoned in irregularity, because, like several other foreign words, being confined to a small circle, they are like so many excrescences on the surface of the language, which disfigure without corrupting it. See Principles, No. 338.

VERMICULAR, vër-mík-ú-lár, a. 88. Acting like a worm, continued from one part to another.

To VERMICULATE, vër-mík-ú-láte, v. a. To inlay to work in chequer work.

VERMICULATION, vër-mík-ú-lá-shún, s. Continuation of motion from one part to another,

VERMICULE, vër-mé-kúle, s. A little grub.

VERMICULOUS, vër-mík-ú-lús, a. Full of grubs.

VERMIFORM, vër-mé-fórm, a. Having the shape of a worm.

VERMIFUGE, vër-mé-fúdje, s. Any medicine that destroys or expels worms.

VERMIL, vër-míl,

VERMILION, vër-míl-yún, 113. } s.

The cochineal, a grub of a particular plant; factitious or native cinnabar, sulphur mixed with mercury; any beautiful red colour.

To VERMILION, vër-míl-yún, v. a. To die red.

VERMIN, vër-mín, s. 140. Any noxious animal.

VERMINOUS, vër-mín-ús, a. Tending to vermin, disposed to breed vermin.

VERMIPAROUS, vër-míp-pá-rús, a. Producing worms.

VERNACULAR, vër-nák-ú-lár, a. Native, of one's own country.

VERNAL, vër-nál, a. 88. Belonging to the spring.

VERNANT, vër-nánt, s. Flourishing as in the spring.

VERSABILITY, vër-sá-bíl-é-té, } s.

VERSABLENESS, vër-sá-bl-nés, } s.

Aptness to be turned or wound any way.

VERSAL, vër-sál, a. 88. A cant word for Universal; total, whole.

VERSATILE, vër-sá-tíl, a. 145. That may be turned round; changeable, variable; easily applied to a new task.

VERSATILENESS, vër-sá-tíl-nés, } s.

VERSATILITY, vër-sá-tíl-é-té, } s.

The quality of being versatile.

VERSE, vërse, s. A line consisting of a certain succession of sounds, and number of feet; a section or paragraph of a book; poetry, lays, metrical language; a piece of poetry.

To be VERSED, vèrst, v. n. 359. To be skilled in, to be acquainted with.

VERSEMAN, vèrs-mán, s. 88. A poet, a writer in verse.

VERSIFICATION, vër-sé-fé-kál-shún, s. The art or practice of making verses.

VERSIFICATOR, vër-sé-fé-kál-túr, } s.

VERSIFIER, vër-sé-fl-úr, 183. } s.

A versifier, a maker of verses with or without the spirit of poetry.

To VERSIFY, vër-sé-fl, v. n. To make verses.

To VERSIFY, vër-sé-fl, v. a. 183. To relate in verse.

VERSION, vër-shún, s. Change, transformation; change of direction; translation; the act of translating.

VERT, vèrt, s. Every thing that grows and bears a green leaf within the forest.

VERTEBRAL, vèrt-é-brál, a. 88. Relating to the joints of the spine.

VERTEBRE, vèrt-é-búr, a. A joint of the back.

↳ This word is perfectly anglicised, and therefore ought to have its last syllable pronounced according to English analogy, like centre, sceptre, mitre, &c. See Principles, No. 416. There is a common mistake in the use of the Latin word from which this is derived, which it may not be improper to rectify. Vertebra is not unfrequently used to signify the whole collection of joints which form the back bone, while in reality it means only one of those joints; the plural is vertebræ, and this ought to be used for the whole spine, if we denominate it by a Latin word; but if we speak English, it ought to be vertebræ, and pronounced as if written vertebræ.

↪ 559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fät 81—mê 93, mêt 95—plne 105, pîn 107—nô 162, möve 164,

VERTEX, vē²-tēks, s. Zenith, the point overhead; the top of a hill.

VERTICAL, vē²-tē-kāl, a. 88. Placed in the zenith; placed in a direction perpendicular to the horizon.

VERTICALITY, vē²-tē-kāl'ē-tē, s. The state of being in the zenith.

VERTICALLY, vē²-tē-kāl'ē, ad. In the zenith.

VERTICITY, vē²-tis'ē-tē, s. The power of turning, circumvolution, rotation.

VERTIGINOUS, vē²-tīd'jīn'ūs, a. Turning round, rotary; giddy.

VERTIGO, vē²-tī-gō, vē²-tē-gō, or vē²-tē-gō, s. 112. A giddiness, a sense of turning in the head.

↪ This word is exactly under the same predicament as serpigo and lentigo. If we pronounce it learnedly, we must place the accent in the first manner. 503. If we pronounce it modishly, and wish to smack of the French or Italian, we must adopt the second; but if we follow the genuine English analogy, we must pronounce it in the last manner. See Principles, No. 112.

The authorities for the first pronunciation are, Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Sheridan, Bailey, and Entick; for the second, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, Mr. Scott, and W. Johnston; and for the third, Dr. Johnson, Dr. Ash, Mr. Perry, Buchanan, Barclay, and Fenning. This too was Swift's pronunciation, as we see by Dr. Johnson's quotation:

"And that old vertigo in his head,
"Will never leave him till he's dead."

In this word we see the tendency of the accent to its true centre in its own language. Vertigo with the accent on the i, and that pronounced long as in title, has so Latin a sound that we scarcely think we are speaking English: this makes us the more readily give into the foreign sound of i, as in fatigue. This sound a correct English ear is soon weary of, and settles at last with the accent on the first syllable, with the i sounded as in indigo, portico, &c.

VERVAIN, 208. } vē²-vīn, s. Plant.

VERVINE, 140. }

VERY, vē²-lē, a. True, real; having any qualities, commonly bad, in an eminent degree, to note things emphatically, or eminently; same.

VETERAN, vē²-tār-ān, s. 88. An old soldier, a man long practised.

VETERAN, vē²-tār-ān, a. Long practised in war, long experienced.

VETERINARY, vē²-tēr-ē-nār-ē, a. Belonging to cattle, particularly horses; from the Latin veterinarius, a farrier, or horse-doctor.

↪ I have adopted this word from a prospect of its becoming a part of the language. As a college is founded in London for studying the diseases to which that useful animal, the horse, is liable, the name of Veterinary College must come into general use, and ought therefore to have place in our dictionaries. —Ash is the only lexicographer who has it.

VICE, vîse, s. The course of action opposite to virtue; a fault, an offence; the fool, or punchinello of old shows; a kind of small iron press with screws, used by workmen; gripe, grasp.

VICE, vîse, s. This word is the ablative case of the Latin word vicis, and is used in composition for one who performs, in his stead, the office of a superior, or who has the second rank in command; as, a Viceroy, a Vicechancellor.

↳ This word is somewhat similar to the prefix male, in malecontent, malepractice, &c. and seems to strengthen the reasons given under those words for pronouncing the first vowel long.

To VICE, vîse, v. a. To draw. Obsolete.

VICEADMIRAL, vîse-âd-mê-râl, s. The second commander of a fleet; a naval officer of the second rank.

VICEADMIRALTY, vîse-âd-mê-râl-tê, s. The office of a viceadmiral.

VICTORY, vik-tûr-ê, s. 557. Conquest, success in contest, triumph.

VICTRESS, vik-três, s. A female that conquers. See Tutores.

VICTUAL, vî-tl, }
VICTUALS, vî-tl, } s. 405.

Provision of food, stores for the support of life, meat.

↳ This corruption, like most others, has terminated in the generation of a new word; for no solemnity will allow of pronouncing this word as it is written. Victuals appeared to Swift so contrary to the real sound, that in some of his manuscript remarks which I have seen, he spells the word vittles. This compliance with sound, however, is full of mischief to language, and ought not to be indulged.—See Skeptick, and Principles, No. 350.

To VICTUAL, vî-tl, v. a. To store with provision for food.

VICTUALLER, vî-tl-ûr, s. One who provides victuals.

VIDELICET, vî-dê-lê-sê-t, ad. To wit, that is generally written Viz.

↳ This is a long-winded word for a short explanation, and its contraction, Viz, a frightful anomaly, which ought never to be pronounced as it is written: the adverb namely ought to be used instead of both; and where it is not, ought in reading always to be substituted for them.

To VIE, vî, v. a. 276. To show or practise in competition.

To VIE, vî, v. n. To contest, to contend.

To VIE, vû, v. a. 286. To survey; to look on by way of examination; to see, to perceive by the eye.

VIEW, vû, s. Prospect; sight, power of beholding; act of seeing; sight, eye; survey, examination by the eye; intellectual survey; space that may be taken in by the eye, reach of sight; appearance, show; display, exhibition to sight or mind; prospect of interest; intention, design.

VILLANOUSNESS, vil-lân-ûs-nês, s. Baseness, wickedness.

VILLANY, vil-lân-ê, s. Wickedness, baseness, depravity; a wicked action, a crime.

↳ In this tribe of words we find a manifest difference between the simple villain and the compounds villany, villanous, &c. Dr. Johnson tells us, these words are derived from the French villain, or the low Latin villanus. Sometimes we find the word in question written villanny; and it is certain, that it either ought to be written so from the old French villonomie, with double l and double n, or from the modern French with these letters single: or if we must form it from our own word

559. Fate 73, fār 77, fäll 63, fāt 81—mê 93, mét 95—pine 105, pñ 107—nò 162, môve 164, villain, (which we seldom choose to do if we can discover the most remote relation to other languages,) in this case, I say, we ought, according to our own analogy, to spell the word villainy.

Dr. Hill published in a pamphlet a petition from the letters I and U to David Garrick, esq. both complaining of terrible grievances imposed upon them by that great actor, who frequently banished them from their proper stations: as in the word virtue, which they said he converted into virtue; and in the word ungrateful he displaced the u, and made it ingrateful, to the great prejudice of the said letters. To this complaint, Garrick replied in the following epigram.

"If it is, as you say, that I've injur'd a letter,
"I'll change my note soon, and I hope for the better:
"May the right use of letters, as well as of men,
"Hereafter be fix'd by the tongue and the pen.
"Most devoutly I wish they may both have their due,
"And that I may be never mistaken for U."
Murphy's Life of Garrick.

☞ This word, says Johnson, Minsheu, with great applause from Skinner, derives from un pere, in French, a father. But whatever may be its derivation, one should think, in pronunciation, it ought to class with empire; and yet we find our orthoepists considerably divided in the sound of the last syllable of both these words.

Empire. { Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, and Mr. Perry, rhyme it with fire; but Mr. Sheridan and Buchanan, with the first of pyr-a-mid.

Umpire. { Mr. Sheridan and W. Johnston rhyme it with fire; but Mr. Perry, Mr. Scott, and Buchanan, with fear; and Dr. Kenrick with the first of pyr-a-mid.

Amst this variety and inconsistency we find a preponderancy to the long sound of i, as in fire: and this, in my opinion, is the most eligible.

Rampire and vampire follow the same analogy; and sature and sapphire may be looked on as irregular.

UN, ūn. A negative particle much used in composition. It is placed almost at will before adjectives and adverbs.

☞ Mr. Mason has very justly observed, that "one uniform effect is not always created by un prefixed. Thus the word unexpressive (as used by both Shakespeare and Milton) is not barely made negative by the composition, but is also changed from active to passive." To these observations we may add, that Shakespeare and Milton's use of unexpressive for unexpressible or inexpressible, is very licentious, and ought not to be followed. The Latin preposition in, and the English un, are sufficiently ambiguous without such unmeaning licenses, which were introduced when the language was less studied, and perhaps merely to help out a hobbling line in poetry. The Latin preposition in is negative in insensible, and what is directly opposite to it, is intensive in inflammatory. The English preposition un is privative in untried; and, if I may be allowed the word, retroactive in undo: a stick which has been bent, may, when made straight, be said to be unbent; but if it was previously straight, we cannot so properly say it is unbent, as that it is not bent.—See Unprincipled.

⇨ This word is not in Johnson, but by its having a place in Junius, Skinner, Philips, Ash, and Barclay, it seems to have been once a living part of the language. It is at present, however, only heard in the mouths of the vulgar, from which state few words ever return into good usage. Junius explains it by solitary, and with great probability supposes it is a corruption of uncouth; but Skinner spells it unkward, and says it is a slight alteration of sense from the Teutonic ungeher, which signifies a monster, a terrible or horrible thing, as solitude is supposed to be. Whatever its etymology may be, its utility can scarcely be disputed; for it has a shade of meaning peculiar to itself, which expresses a disagreeable passive state, arising from a concurrence of jarring circumstances. Thus we sometimes hear the common people say, I found myself very unked; it was very unked to do so. Now though irksome is the nearest word, and might supply the second phrase, it is quite incompatible with the first: nor is it a perfect equivalent to unked in the second; for irksome implies a much more disagreeable state than unked, which seems to mean a disagreeable state arising from obstacle, and therefore seems to form a middle sense between uncouth and irksome. In this sense the word appears to have been used by Charles Butler, of Magdalen College, Oxford, in his English Grammar, 1734, where, speaking of the necessity of altering the orthography, he says, "Nevertheless, so powerful is the tyrant custom, opposing and overruling right and reason, that I do easily believe this little change, (though never so right, reasonable and profitable) will seem to some harsh and unked at the first: but, after a while, being inured thereunto, I suppose they will rather wonder, how our ancient, eloquent, noble language, in other respects equalizing the best, could so long endure these gross and disgraceful barbarisms."—Preface to the Reader.

Dr. Johnson very justly censures this word as improper, though authorised by Shakespeare, Bacon, Taylor, and Collier; for, says he, there is no difference between rip and unrip; therefore the negative particle is of no force. But to this it may be observed, that the negative particle is not merely redundant; it implies something in opposition to what it is prefixed to; so that to unrip must signify joining together something that has been ripped; the inseparable preposition un is not like in used intensively; for when we want to enforce the verb to rip, we say to rip up, or to rip open.—See Unloose

UTERUS, yú'té-rús, s. 503. The womb.

UTILE, yú'té-lé, s. Something useful, as opposed to something only ornamental.

☞ When this word is pronounced in three syllables, being the neuter gender of utilis, it becomes like simile, a substantive, and like a pure latin word has the same number of syllables as the original, (503, b) and thus we sometimes hear of a work that unites the utile and the dulce.

UTILE, yú'tíl, a. Profitable, useful.

☞ When this word is used as an adjective it is pronounced in two syllables, with the last short. In this form, however, it is but seldom seen or heard.

UTILITY, yú'tíl-é-té, s. Useful profit, convenience, advantageousness.

UTMOST, ú'tmóst, a. Extreme, placed at the extremity; being in the highest degree.

UTMOST, ú'tmóst, s. The most that can be, the greatest power.

VULNERARY, vúl'núr-á-ré, a. 555. Useful in the cure of wounds.

To VULNERATE, vúl'núr-áte, v. a. 91. To wound, to hurt.

VULPINE, vúl'pín, or vúl'píne, a. Belonging to a fox.

☞ Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Scott mark the i in the last syllable long, as in pine. I am inclined to shorten it with Mr. Perry, like pin; and my reason is, that the accent immediately precedes it. See Principles, No. 140.

VULTURE, vúl'tshúre, s. A large bird of prey remarkable for voracity.

VULTURINE, vúl'tshú-ríne, a. 149. Belonging to a vulture.

To WAFT, wáft, v. a. To carry through the air, or on the water; to beckon, to inform by a sign of any thing moving.

↪ Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, and Mr. Scott, pronounce the a in this word as I have marked it; Mr. Perry adopts the a in father; and though Mr. Smith thinks this the true sound, confesses the short a is daily gaining ground; but W. Johnston, for want of attending to the rule laid down in Principles, No. 83, makes waft rhyme with soft: Mr. Nares has not got the word; but by omitting it in classes where the a is pronounced as in father and water, shows he is of opinion it ought to have the sound I have given it.

To WAFT, wáft, v. n. To float.

WAFF, wáft, s. A floating body; motion of a streamer.

WAFTAGE, wáft²dje, s. 90. Carriage by water or air.

WAFTURE, wáft²shüre, s. 461. The act of waving.

To WAG, wág, v. a. 85. To move lightly, to shake slightly.

To WAG, wág, v. n. To be in quick or ludicrous motion; to go; to be moved.

WAG, wág, s. One ludicrously mischievous, a merry droll.

To WAGE, wádje, v. a. To attempt, to venture; to make, to carry on.

WAGER, wádjúr, s. 98. A bet, any thing pledged upon a chance or performance.

To WAGER, wádjúr, v. a. To lay, to pledge as a bet.

WAGES, wádjíz, s. 99. Pay given for service.

WAGGERY, wágdúr-é, s. 555. Mischievous merriment, roguish trick, sarcastical gayety.

WAGGISH, wágdísh, a. 383. Knavishly merry, merrily mischievous, frolicksome.

WAGGISHNESS, wágdísh-nés, s. Merry mischief.

To WAGGLE, wágdgl, v. n. 405. To waddle, to move from side to side.

WAGON, wág²ún, s. 166. A heavy carriage for burthens; a chariot.

WAGONER, wág²ún-úr, s. 98. One who drives a wagon.

WAGTAIL, wág²l-ále, s. A bird. Generally called a Water-wagtail.

WAID, wáde, a. 202. Crushed. Obsolete.

WAIVE, wáfe, s. Goods found and claimed by nobody. That of which every one waives the claim. Sometimes written wey or west. This, says Mr. Mason, is a legal word, but not legally explained; since Blackstone says waifs are goods stolen and waived, or thrown away by the thief in his flight.

To WAIL, wále, v. a. To moan, to lament, to bewail.

To WAIL, wále, v. n. 202. To grieve audibly, to express sorrow.

WAIL, wále, s. Audible sorrow.

WAILING, wá²líng, s. 410. Lamentation, moan, audible sorrow.

WAILFUL, wále²ful, a. Sorrowful, mournful.

WAIN, wáne, s. A carriage.

WAINROPE, wáne-rópe, s. A large cord, with which the load is tied on the wagon.

WAINSCOT, wén²skút, s. The inner wooden covering of a wall.

To WAINSCOT, wén²skút, v. a. To line walls with boards; to line in general.

↪ I have given the common sound of this word; and as it is marked by Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Scott, and adopted in Steele's Grammar. Mr. Perry pronounces the first syllable so as to rhyme with man; but W. Johnston, who pronounces both this word and waistcoat with the ai short, is, in my opinion, the most correct.

WAIST, wáste, s. The smallest part of the body, the part below the ribs; the middle deck of a ship.

WAISTCOAT, wés²kót, s. A garment worn about the waist; the garment worn by men under the coat.

↪ This word has fallen into the general contraction observable in similar compounds, but, in my opinion, not so irrecoverably as some have done. It would scarcely sound pedantick if both parts of the word were pronounced with equal distinctness; though Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Scott pronounce the diphthong as I have marked it.

To WAIT, wáte, v. a. To expect, to stay for; to attend, to accompany with submission or respect; to attend as a consequence of something.

To WAIT, wáte, v. n. To expect, to stay in expectation; to pay servile or submissive attendance; to attend; to stay, not to depart from; to follow as a consequence.

WAIT, wáte, s. Ambush, secret attempt.

WAITER, wá²túr, s. 98. An attendant, one who attends for the accommodation of others.

To WAIVE, wáve, v. a. To put off, to quit, to relinquish.

↪ I have inserted this word on the authority of Blackstone, quoted by Mr. Mason, as may be seen under the word Waif, and I remember to have seen it spelled in this manner, though I cannot recollect by whom. Its etymology is uncertain; but, distinguishing it from the word ware, from which it can scarcely be derived, is of real utility to the language, which, as much as possible, ought to adopt a different orthography to express a different sense, or a different pronunciation.—See Bowl.

To WAKE, wáke, v. n. To watch, not to sleep; to be roused from sleep, to cease to sleep; to be put in action, to be excited.

To WAKE, wáke, v. a. To rouse from sleep; to excite, to put in motion or action; to bring to life again, as if from the sleep of death.

WAKE, wáke, s. The feast of the Dedication of the Church, formerly kept by watching all night; vigils, state of forbearing sleep.

WAKEFUL, wáke²ful, a. Not sleeping, vigilant.

WAKEFULNESS, wáke²ful-nés, s. Want of sleep; forbearance of sleep.

nör 167, nôt 163—tûbe 171, tûb 172, búll 173—ðíl 299—póund 313—thín 466, THIS 469.

To WAKEN, wá¹-kn, v. n. 103. To wake, to cease from sleep, to be roused from sleep.

To WAKEN, wá¹-kn, v. a. To rouse from sleep; to excite to action; to produce, to bring forth.

WALE, wá¹-le, s. A rising part in cloth.

To WALK, wá¹-wk, v. n. 84. To move by leisurely steps, so that one foot is set down before the other is taken up; it is used in the ceremonious language of invitation for Come or Go; to move for exercise or amusement; to move the slowest pace, not to trot, gallop, or amble; to appear as a spectre; to act in sleep; to act in any particular manner.

To WALK, wá¹-wk, v. a. To pass through.

WALK, wá¹-wk, s. 84. Act of walking for air or exercise; gait, step, manner of moving; a length of space, or circuit through which one walks; an avenue set with trees; way, road, range, place of wandering; a fish: Walk is the slowest or least raised pace, or going of a horse.

WALKER, wá¹-wk-ú¹, s. 98. One who walks; a fuller.

WALKINGSTAFF, wá¹-wk-íng-stáff, s. A stick which a man holds to support himself in walking.

WALL, wá¹-ll, s. 33. 77. 84. A series of brick or stone carried upwards and cemented with mortar, the sides of a building; fortification, works built for defence: to take the Wall, to take the upper place, not to give place.

To WALL, wá¹-ll, v. a. To enclose with walls; to defend by walls.

WALLCREEPER, wá¹-ll-kreep-ú¹, s. A bird.

WALLET, wá¹-lét, s. 85. 99. A bag in which the necessities of a traveller are put, a knapsack; any thing protuberant and swagging.

WALLEYED, wá¹-léd, a. Having white eyes.

WALLFLOWER, wá¹-ll-flóú-ú¹, s.—See Stockgilliflower.

To WALLOW, wá¹-lól, v. n. 85. To move heavily and clumsily; to roll himself in mire or any thing filthy; to live in any state of filth or gross vice.

WALLOW, wá¹-lól, s. 85. A kind of rolling or groveling motion.

WALLRUE, wá¹-ll-rú², s. An herb.

WALLWORT, wá¹-ll-wú¹t, s. A plant, the same with dwarf-elder, or danewort.—See Elder.

WALNUT, wá¹-nú¹t, s. The name of a tree; the fruit and wood of the tree.

WALLPEPPER, wá¹-ll-pép-pú¹r, s. Houseleek.

WALTRON, wá¹-ll-trún, s. 166. The seahorse.

To WAMBLE, wám¹-bl, v. n. 405. To roll with nausea and sickness. It is used of the stomach.

WAN, wá¹-n, a. 85. Pale as with sickness, languid of look.

Mr. Sheridan has given the a in this word and its compounds, the same sound as in man. Mr. Scott and Dr. Kenrick have given both the sound I have given and Mr. Sheridan's, but seem to prefer the former by placing it first. I have always heard it pronounced like the first syllable of wan-ton; and find Mr. Nares, W. Johnston, and Mr. Perry, have so marked it. I have, indeed, heard wan, the old preterit of the verb to win, pronounced so as to rhyme with ran: but as this form of the verb is obsolete, the pronunciation is so too.—See Wasp.

WAND, wá¹-nd, s. A small stick or twig, a long rod; any staff of authority or use; a charming rod.

To WANDER, wá¹-nd-ú¹r, v. n. 98. To rove, to ramble here and there, to go without any certain course; to deviate, to go astray.

WASHY, wôsh-ê, a. Watery, damp; weak, not solid.

WASP, wôsp, s. 85. A brisk stinging insect, in form resembling a bee.

☞ Mr. Sheridan has pronounced this word so as to rhyme with hasp, clasp, &c. This sound is so perfectly new to me, that I should have supposed it to have been an error of the press, if Mr. Scott and Dr. Kenrick had not marked it in the same manner: Mr. Smith and Mr. Perry approach somewhat nearer to the true sound of a, by giving it the same sound as in father; but Mr. Nares and W. Johnston give it the sound of short o, like the a in was, wash, &c.: and that this is the true sound, see Principles, No. 85.

WASPISH, wôsp-îsh, a. Peevish, malignant, irritable.

WHORE, hór, or hóre, s. A woman who converses unlawfully with men, a fornicatress, an adulteress, a strumpet; a prostitute, a woman who receives men for money.

↪ If there can be a polite pronunciation of this vulgar word, it is the first of these, rhyming with poor. The Stage has followed this pronunciation; Mr. Sheridan has adopted it; but Dr. Kenrick and Mr. Scott give the preference to the last; and W. Johnston, Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Perry, and Barclay, adopt only the last, rhyming with more. This, it must be confessed, is the most analogical; but as it is used by the vulgar, the polite world think they depart a little from the vulgarity of the word, by departing from its genuine pronunciation.

To WHORE, hór, v. n. To converse unlawfully with the other sex.

To WHORE, hór, v. a. To corrupt with regard to chastity.

WHORED, hór-dúm, s. Fornication.

↳ These two modes of pronunciation have been long contending for superiority, till at last the former seems to have gained a complete victory, except in the territories of rhyme. Here the poets claim a privilege, and readers seem willing to grant it them, by pronouncing this word, when it ends a verse, so as to rhyme with the word it is coupled with:

“For as in bodies, thus in soul we find,
“What wants in blood and spirits, fill'd with wínd.”

But in prose this regular and analogical pronunciation borders on the antiquated and pedantic.

What could have been the cause of this deviator from the general rule in this word and gold, it is not easy to guess; they were both bound to their true sound in the fetters of rhyme; but these fetters, which are supposed to alter the pronunciation of some words by linking dissimilar sounds, have not been strong enough to restrain these from a capricious irregularity. It is not improbable that the first deviation began in the compounds, such as goldsmith, goldfinch, windmill, windward, &c. (as it is a prevailing idiom of pronunciation to shorten simples in their compounds, see Principles, No. 515, and the word Knowledge), and these at last corrupted the simples. But whatever may have been the cause, the effect is now become so general, that reducing them to their true sound seems almost impracticable. Mr. Sheridan tells us, that Swift used to jeer those who pronounced wind with the i short, by saying, “I have a great mínd to find why you pronounce it wínd.” A very illiberal critic retorted this upon Mr. Sheridan, by saying, “If I may be so bold, I should be glad to be told why you pronounce it gold.” The truth is, every child knows how these words ought to be pronounced according to analogy; but it requires some judgment, and an extensive acquaintance with polite and literary circles, to know which is the most current pronunciation. Where analogy is not so evident, and yet as real as in these words,

It is some credit to a speaker to depart a little from custom in favour of analogy; but where every one knows as well as ourselves what ought to be the pronunciation, and yet where every one pronounces in opposition to it, we shall get nothing but contempt by departing from the general voice. With respect to the words in question, my observation fails me, if wínd, as a single word, is not more fixed in the sound of short i, than gold in the sound of oo; the true sound of this last word seems not quite irrevocable, except in the compound goldsmith; but the compounds of wínd, such as wíndy, wíndmill, wíndward, &c. must, in my opinion, be given up; nor till some superior spirit, uniting the politeness of a Chesterfield with the genius of a Swift, descends to vindicate the rights of an injured word, do I think that wínd will, in prose and familiar language, ever be a fashionable pronunciation. The language of Scripture seems to have native dignity and solemnity sufficient to authorize the long sound, but no other. Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Scott give the same preference to the first sound of this word that I have done. Dr. Kenrick and Mr. Barclay give only the short sound. Mr. Perry joins them in this sound; but says, in dramatick scenes it has the long one. Mr. Nares says, it has certainly the short sound in common usage, but that all our best poets rhyme it with mínd, kínd, &c.; and Mr. Smith observes, that it is now the polite pronunciation, though against analogy.

WORTHY, wûr'thê, s. A man laudable for any eminent quality, particularly for valour.

To WOT, wôt, v. n. To know, to be aware.

Mr. Elphinston is singular in pronouncing this word so as to rhyme it with hut; Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, and Mr. Smith, rhyme it with not.

WOVE, wôve. Pret. and part. pass. of Weave.

WOVEN, wôv'n, 103. The part. pass. of Weave.

WOULD, wûd, 320. The pret. of Will; it is generally used as an auxiliary verb with an infinitive, to which it gives the force of the subjunctive mood; was or am resolved, wish or wished to; it is a familiar term for wish to do, or to have.—See Been.

WOULD-BE, wûd'bê, a. Foolishly pretended to be.

WOUND, wöund, or wöund, s. 315. A hurt given by violence.

The first pronunciation of this word, though generally received among the polite world, is certainly a capricious novelty; a novelty either generated by false criticism to distinguish it from the preterit of the verb to wind, of which there was not the least danger of interference, see Howl; or more probably from an affectation of the French sound of this diphthong, which, as in pour, and some other words, we find of late to have prevailed. The Stage is in possession of this sound, and what Swift observes of newspapers with respect to the introduction of new and fantastical words, may be applied to the Stage, with respect to new and fantastical modes of pronunciation, see Sigh. That the other pronunciation was the established sound of this word, appears from the poets, who rhyme it with bound, found, ground, and around, and is still so among the great bulk of speakers, who learn this sound at school, and are obliged to unlearn it again when they come into the conversation of the polite world. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Elphinston, adopt the first sound of this word; but Dr. Kenrick and W. Johnston the second: Mr. Perry gives both, but prefers the first; and though Mr. Smith, in his Vocabulary, has classed it with sound and found, he says wöund is the common pronunciation. I am, however, of Mr. Nares's opinion, who says this pronunciation ought to be entirely banished. But where is the man bold enough to risk the imputation of vulgarity by such an expulsion?

To WOUND, wöund, or wöund, v. a. To hurt by violence.

WOUND, wöund. The pret. and part. pass. of To Wind,

WOUNDLESS, wöund'lês, a. Exempt from wounds.

WOUNDWORT, wöund'wurt, s. A plant.

WRACK, râk, s. Properly Wreck. Destruction of a ship; ruin, destruction.—See Shipwreck.

To WRACK, râk, v. a. 474. To destroy in the water, to wreck; it seems in Milton to mean, to rock, to shake; to torture, to torment.

To WRANGLE, râng'gl, v. n. 405. To dispute peevishly, to quarrel perversely.

WRANGLE, râng'gl, s. A quarrel, a perverse dispute.

WRANGLER, râng'gl-ûr, s. A perverse, peevish, disputative man.

To WRAP, râp, v. a. 474. To roll together, to complicate; to involve; to cover with something rolled or thrown round; to comprise, to contain; to Wrap up, to involve totally; to transport, to put in ecstasy.

This word is often pronounced rop, rhyming with top, even by speakers much above the vulgar. They have a confused idea, that a preceding w makes the a broad, and do not attend to the intervening r, which bears the power of the w, and necessarily preserves the a in its short Italian sound. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry, and Mr. Smith, pronounce it as I have done.

WRAPPER, râp'pûr, s. 98. One who wraps; that in which any thing is wrapped.

WRATH, rôth, or râth, s. 474. Anger, fury, rage.

The first pronunciation of this word is by far the more usual, but the last is more analogical. The w has no power over the a, for the same reason as in the preceding word. A want of attending to this, and, perhaps, confounding this word with the obsolete adjective wrath, are the reasons of the present currency of this erroneous pronunciation. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Smith, adopt the first sound; and Mr. Perry alone the last; but in a case where analogy is so clear, his authority ought, in my opinion, to outweigh them all.

WRATHFUL, rôth'fûl, or râth'fûl, a. Angry, furious, raging.

WRATHFULLY, rôth'fûl-lê, or râth'fûl-lê, ad. Furiously, passionately.

WRATHLESS, rôth'lês, or râth'lês, a. Free from anger.

To WREAK, rêke, v. a. Old pret. and part. pass. Wroke. To revenge; to execute any violent design.

The diphthong in this word has the sound I have given it, in Sheridan, Scott, W. Johnston, Dr. Kenrick, Perry, Smith, and Barclay.

WREAK, rêke, s. 474. Revenge, vengeance; passion, furious fit.

WREAKFUL, rêke'fûl, a. Revengeful, angry.

WREATH, rêth, or rêthe, s. 467. Any thing curled or twisted; a garland, a chaplet.

I have placed what I think the best usual mode of pronouncing this word first, because I think it so much more agreeable to analogy than the second. Nouns and verbs spelled alike, and ending with a hissing consonant, seem throughout the whole language to be distinguished from each other by the former giving the sharp, and the latter the flat sound to the consonant. See Principles, No. 437. 467. 499.

To WREATH, rêthe, v. a. Pret. Wreathed. Part. pass. Wreathed, Wreathen. To curl, to twist, to convolve; to interweave, to entwine one in another to encircle as a garland; to encircle as with a garland.

WREATHY, rê'thê, a. Spiral, curled, twisted.

WRECK, rêk, s. 474. Destruction by being driven on rocks or shallows at sea; dissolution by violence ruin, destruction.—See Shipwreck.

Mr. Sheridan alone has given the sound of a to the e in this word; Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Perry, and Mr. Smith, pronounce it as I have done.

559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fåt 81—mê 93, mêt 95—pline 105, pin 107—nô 162, môte 164,

WROTE, rŏte. Pret. and part. of Write.
WROTH, rŏth, a. Angry. Out of use.—See Wrath.
WROUGHT, rĕwt, 319. 393. The pret. and part. pass. as it seems, of Work. Effected, performed; influenced, prevailed on; produced, caused; worked, laboured; gained, attained; operated; worked; actuated; managed; formed; excited by degrees; guided, managed; agitated, disturbed.
WRUNG, rŭng. The pret. and part. pass. of Wring.
WRY, rĭ, a. 474. Crooked, deviating from the right direction; distorted; wrung, perverted, wrested.
TO WRY, rĭ, v. n. To be contorted and writhed, to deviate from the right direction.

X.

X, says Johnson, is a letter which, though found in Saxon words, begins no word in the English language.

It may be observed, that in words from the Greek, where it is initial, it is always pronounced like Z. For the true pronunciation of this letter, when medial or final in English words, See Principles, No. 467.

XEROCOLLYRIUM, zĕ-rŏ-kŏl-lĭr-rĕ-ŭm, s. A dry plaster for sore eyes.

XERODES, zĕ-rŏ-dĕz, s. Any tumour attended with dryness.

XEROMIRUM, zĕ-rŏ-mĭr-rŭm, s. 503. A drying ointment.

XEROPHAGY, zĕ-rŏf-ĕ-jĕ, s. 518. The eating of dry meats, a sort of fast among the primitive Christians.

XEROPHTHALMY, zĕ-rŏp'thĕl-mĕ, s. A dry red soreness or itching in the eyes, without any dropping or swelling.

XEROTES, zĕ-rŏ-tĕz, s. 503. A dry habit or disposition of body.

XIPHIAS, zĭf-ĕ-ĕs, s. The sword fish; also a comet shaped like a sword.

XIPHODES, zĕ-rŏ-dĕz, s. The pointed sword-like cartilage or gristle of the breast bone.

XYLOBALSAMUM, zĭ-lŏ-bĕl-sĕ-mŭm, s. The wood of the balsam tree.

XYSTER, zĭs'tĕr, s. A surgeon's instrument to scrape and shave bones with.

Y.

YACHT, yót, s. 356. A small ship for carrying passengers.

↳ This word is pronounced as I have marked it, by Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Smith; Dr. Kenrick pronounces it yat, rhyming it with hat; and Mr. Barclay yant, rhyming with nought.

YAM, yám, s. A root that grows in America and the South-Sea Islands.

YARD, s. 78. Enclosed ground adjoining to a house; a measure of three feet; the supports of the sails of a ship.

YARE, yáre, a. Ready, dexterous, eager.

YARELY, yáre^llê, ad. Dexterously, skilfully.

YARN, yárn, s. 78. Spun wool, woollen thread.

YARROW, yár^rrô, s. 81. A plant which grows wild on dry banks, and is used in medicine.

YAWL, yáwl, s. 219. A little vessel belonging to a ship, for convenience of passing to and from it.

To YAWN, yáwn, v. n. 219. To gape, to have the mouth opened involuntarily; to open wide; to express desire by yawning.

YAWN, yáwn, s. Oscitation; gape, hiatus.

YAWNING, yáwn^ging, a. 410. Sleeping, slumbering.

YCLAD, ê^l-klád! Part. for Clad. Clothed.

YCLEPÉD, ê^l-klépt! Called, termed, named.

YE, yê. The solemn nominative plural of Thou.

YEA, yê, ad. 227. Yes.

↳ Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Fry, pronounce this word so as to rhyme with may, pay, &c. But Steele or Brightland, Dr. Jones who wrote The New Art of Spelling in Queen Anne's time, Dr. Kenrick and Mr. Perry, pronounce it like the pronoun ye. Though so many are against me, I do not hesitate to pronounce the latter mode the best; first, as it is more agreeable to the general sound of the diphthong; next, as it is more related to its familiar substitute yes; and lastly, unless my memory greatly fails me, because it is always so pronounced when contrasted with no; as in that precept of the Gospel, "Let your communication be yea, yea, and no, no."

To YEAN, yéne, v. n. 227. To bring young. Used of sheep.

YEANLING, yéne^ling, s. 410. The young of sheep.

YEAR, yére, s. 227. Twelve months; it is often used plurally, without a plural termination; in the plural, old age.

YEARLING, yére^ling, a. 410. Being a year old.

YEARLY, yére^lê, a. Annual, happening every year, lasting a year.

YEARLY, yére^lê, ad. Annually,

To YEARN, yérn, v. n. 234. To feel great internal uneasiness.

To YEARN, yérn, v. a. To grieve, to vex.

YELK, yêlk, s. (Gealkewe, yellow, Saxon.) The yellow part of the egg.

↳ It is commonly pronounced, says Johnson, and often written Yolk. To which we may add, that when the word is so written, the l is silent, and the word pronounced yoke. But Johnson seems justly to have preferred the former mode of writing and pronouncing this word, as more agreeable both to etymology and the best usage.

To YELL, yêll, v. n. To cry out with horror and agony.

YELL, yêll, s. A cry of horror.

YELLOW, yêllô, a. Being of a bright glaring colour, as gold.

↳ Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Nares, Mr. Scott, Dr. Jones, and Mr. Fry, pronounce this word as if written yellow, rhyming with tollow. But Dr. Kenrick, W. Johnston, Mr. Smith, and Mr. Perry, preserve the e in its pure sound, and rhyme the word with wellow. The latter mode is, in my opinion, clearly the best, both as more agreeable to analogy, and the best usage; for I am much deceived if the former pronunciation do not border closely on the vulgar.

YELLOWBOY, yêllô^bôê, s. A gold coin. A very low word.

YELLOWHAMMER, yêllô^l-hám-mûr, s. A bird.

YELLOWISH, yêllô^l-îsh, a. Approaching to yellow.

YELLOWISHNESS, yêllô^l-îsh-nês, s. The quality of approaching to yellow.

YELLOWNESS, yêllô^l-nês, s. The quality of being yellow: it is used in Shakespeare for jealousy.

YELLOWS, yêllôze, s. A disease in horses.

To YELP, yêlp, v. n. To bark as a beagle hound after his prey.

YEOMAN, yô^mmán, s. 260. A man of a small estate in land, a farmer, a gentleman farmer; it seems to have been anciently a kind of ceremonious title given to soldiers, whence we have Yeomen of the guard; it was probably a freeholder not advanced to the rank of a gentleman.

↳ Junius gives us a great variety of derivations of this word, but seems most to approve of that from gæman in the old Frisick, signifying a countryman or villager; and this word is derived farther by Junius from the Greek γῶμα, γῶμα, γῶ, which he tells us does not only signify the earth in general, but any great portion of land. Skinner says it may be derived from the Anglo-Saxon gemæne, or the Teutonic gemein, a common man, or one of the commonalty; or from coeceman, a shepherd; from goodman, an appellation given to inferior people; from gemana, a companion; from geongman, a young man; from jeman, an ordinary man, or any body, like the Spanish hidalgo; but he prefers its derivation from the Anglo-Saxon guma, a painful or laborious man.

But however widely etymologists are divided in the derivation of this word, orthoëpists are not less different in their pronunciation of it. Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Mr. Coote, (author of the Elements of Grammar,) Steele's Grammar, (published in Queen Anne's time,) Mr. Barclay, Mr. Smith, and Buchanan, pronounce it with the diphthong short, as if written yemman; Dr. Kenrick pronounces it as if written yûmman; Mr. Elphinston, (who quotes Langham, the famous reformer of orthography in Queen Elizabeth's time, for the same pronunciation,) sounds the o like ee; and Dr. Jones, the author of the New Art of Spelling in Queen Anne's time pronounces it in the same manner. To which we may add Ben Jonson, who says that yeoman, people, and jeopardy, were truer written yemmen, peple, jeopardy. But W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, Entick, and Fry, pronounce the o like long open o, as if written yôman; and this last appears to me to be the most received pronunciation. It is that which we constantly hear applied to the King's body guard, and it is that which has always been the pronunciation on the Stage; an authority which, in this case, may not, perhaps, improperly be called the best echo of the public voice. I well remember hearing Mr. Garrick pronounce the word in this manner, in a speech in King Lear: "Tell me, fellow, is a madman a gentleman, or a yôman?"

YEOMANRY, yô^mmán-rê, s. 260. The collective body of yeomen.

To YERK, yêrk, v. a. To throw out or move with a spring.

YERK, yêrk, s. A quick motion.

To YERN, yérn, v. a.—See Yearn.

YES, yîs, ad. 101. A term of affirmation; the affirmative particle opposed to No.

↳ This word is worn into a somewhat slenderer sound than what is authorised by the orthography; but e and a are frequently interchangeable, and few changes can be better established than this. W. Johnston and Mr. Perry are the only orthoëpists who give the sound of the vowels, that do not mark this change; but Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, Mr. Smith, and Dr. Jones, in his New Art of Spelling, confirm this change, and rhyme it with hiss, miss, bliss, &c.—See Been and Despatch.

↪ 559. Fåte 73, får 77, fäll 83, fät 81—mê 93, mét 95—pline 105, pin 107—nô 162, môve 164, YEST, yest, s. The foam, spume, or flower of beer in fermentation, barm; the spume on a troubled sea.

↪ Dr. Johnson has very properly spelled this word yest, from the Saxon gest, and not yeast as we sometimes see it; and this spelling decides its pronunciation. Dr. Jones spells it yeast, and gives the diphthong its long sound; Mr. Nares pronounces the word in the same manner, but spells it yest; Dr. Kenrick spells it yest, but rhymes it with mist; Mr. Barclay pronounces it yest; Mr. Perry writes it yeast and yest; but Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, and Mr. Smith, write it as Dr. Johnson has done, and pronounce it as I have done; and I think not only more agreeable to analogy, which forbids us to pronounce e long, when followed by st in the same syllable, see Lest, but, if I mistake not, more consonant to polite usage. The vulgar do not only pronounce the diphthong long, but sink the y, and reduce the word to east.

YESTY, yest-tê, a. Frothy, spumy.

YESTER, yest-túr, a. Being next before the present day.

YESTERDAY, yest-túr-dá, s. The day last past the next day before to-day.

↪ Though yes, from its continual use, is allowably worn into the somewhat easier sound of ye, there is no reason that yesterday should adopt the same change; and though I cannot pronounce this change vulgar, since Mr. Sheridan, Dr. Kenrick, Mr. Nares, and Mr. Scott have adopted it, I do not hesitate to pronounce the regular sound given by W. Johnston as the more correct, and agreeable to the best usage.

YESTERNIGHT, yest-túr-níte, s. The night before this night.

YET, yét, conj. Nevertheless, notwithstanding, however.

↪ The e in this word is frequently changed by incorrect speakers into i; but though this change is agreeable to the best and most established usage in the word yes; in yet it is the mark of incorrectness, and vulgarity.

Dr. Kenrick is the only orthoëpist who gives any countenance to this incorrectness, by admitting it as a second pronunciation; but Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Mr. Perry, and Mr. Smith, give the regular sound only.

YET, yét, ad. Beside, over and above; still, the state still remaining the same; once again; at this time, so soon, hitherto, with a negative before it; at least; it notes increase or extension of the sense of the words to which it is joined; still, in a new degree; even, after all; hitherto.

YEW, yô², s. A tree of tough wood.

To YIELD, yeeld, v. a. 275. To produce, to give in return for cultivation or labour; to produce in general; to afford, to exhibit; to give as claimed of right; to allow, to consent to emit, to expire; to resign, to give up; to surrender.

To YIELD, yeeld, v. n. To give up the contest, to submit; to comply with any person; to comply with things; to concede, to admit, to allow, not to deny; to give place as inferior in excellence or any other quality.

YIELDER, yeeld-túr, s. One who yields.

YOKE, yôke, s. The bandage placed on the neck of draught oxen; a mark of servitude, slavery; a chain, a link, a bond; a couple, two, a pair.

To YOKE, yôke, v. a. To bind by a yoke or carriage; to join or couple with another; to enslave, to subdue; to restrain, to confine.

YOKE-ELM, yôke-êlm, s. A tree.

YOKEFELLOW, yôke-fêl-lô, } s.

YOKEMATE, yôke-mâte, } s.
Companion in labour; mate, fellow.

YOLK, yôke, s. The yellow part of an egg.—See Yelk.

YON, yôn, } a.

YONDER, yôn-dúr, 98, } a.

Being at a distance within view.

↪ There is a vulgar pronunciation of this word in London, as if written yander. This cannot be too carefully avoided.

YOKE, yôre, ad. Long; of old time, long ago.

YOU, yô², pron. 2. 315. The oblique case of Ye; it is used in the nominative it is the ceremonial word for the second person singular, and is always used, except in solemn language.

↪ A very common error in reading and speaking, arises from pronouncing the personal pronoun you in the manner, whether it is in the nominative or in an oblique case. It is certain that you and my when they are contradistinguished from other pronouns, and consequently emphatical, are always pronounced with their full open sound, rhyming with view and high; but it is as certain, if we observe correct pronunciation, that when they are not emphatical by being opposed to other words, and do not take the lead in a sentence, they are sounded like ye and me; rhyming with sea. Thus, for example, "Ye told him all the truth." Here the word you is a nominative case, that is, it goes before the word denoting action, and must therefore be pronounced full and open so as to rhyme with view. In this sentence also, "He told you before he told any one else." The word you is in the oblique case, or comes after the word denoting action; but as it is emphatical by being contradistinguished from any one else, it preserves its full open sound as before. But in the sentence, "Though he told you, he had no right to tell you." Here the pronoun you is in the oblique case, or follows the word denoting action, and having no distinctive emphasis invariably falls into the sound of the antiquated form of this pronoun, ye, and as if written, "Though he told ye, he had no right to tell ye."—See the word My.

Perhaps it was this pronunciation of the pronoun you, when in an oblique case, which induced Shakespeare and Milton, sometimes to write it ye, though, as Dr. Lowth observes, very ungrammatically:

"The more shame for ye, holy men I thought ye."

Henry VIII.

"His wrath, which one day will destroy ye both."

Milton's Par. Lost, ll. v. 784.

YOUNG, yung, a. Being in the first part of life, not old; ignorant, weak; it is sometimes applied to vegetable life.

YOUNG, yung, s. 314. The offspring of animals collectively.

YOUNGISH, yung-ish, a. 381. Somewhat young.

YOUNGLING, yung-ling, s. 410. Any creature in the first part of life.

YOUNGLY, yung-lê, ad. 381. Early in life; ignorantly, weakly.

YOUNGSTER, yung-stúr, } s.

YOUNKER, yungk-túr, 98, } s.
Ludicrously, a young person.

YOUR, yô², pron. Belonging to you. Yours is used when the substantive goes before or is understood, as, this is Your book, this book is Yours.

↪ This word is nearly under the same predicament as the pronoun my. When the emphasis is upon this word, it is always pronounced full and open, like the noun ever; as, "The moment I had read Your letter I sat down to write Mine;" but when it is not emphatical, it generally sinks into yr, exactly like the last syllable of law-yr; as, "I had just answered yr first letter as yr last arrived." Here, if we were to say, "I had just answered your first letter as your last arrived," with your sounded full and open like ever, as in the former sentence, every delicate ear would be offended. This obscure sound of the possessive pronoun your always takes place when it is used to signify any species of persons or things in an indeterminate sense. Thus Addison, speaking of those metaphors which professional men most commonly fall into, says, "Your men of business usually have recourse to such instances as are too mean and familiar." Spectator, No. 421.

YOURSELF, yûr-sêlf, s. You, even you; ye, not others.

↪ The pronunciation of your in this word is a confirmation of the observations on the foregoing word.

YOUTH, yô²th, s. The part of life succeeding to childhood and adolescence; a young man; young men.

YOUTHFUL, yô²th-fûl, a. Young; suitable to the first part of life; vigorous as in youth.

YOUTHFULLY, yô²th-fûl-lê, ad. In a youthful manner.

YOUTHY, yô²th-lê, a. 381. Young, youthful.

Z.

For the true Name of this Letter, see Principles, No. 424.

ZANY, záné, s. One employed to raise laughter by his gestures, actions, and speeches, a merry-andrew, a buffoon.

ZEAL, zéle, s. Passionate ardour for any person or cause.

ZEALOT, zélút, or zélút, s. 235. One passionately ardent in any cause. Generally used in dispraise.

☞ There are few words better confirmed by authority in their departure from the sound of their simple than this and the following word. Dr. Ash and Bailey are the only lexicographers who (if we may judge by the position of the accent) give the long sound to this word, as in zeal; and even these give the short sound to zealous. Dr. Kenrick gives both sounds to both words, but prefers the short sound by placing it first: but Mr. Elphinston, Mr. Sheridan, Mr. Scott, W. Johnston, Mr. Nares, Mr. Smith, Mr. Perry, Barclay, and Entick, give both these words the short sound. As the word zealous may either come from the Latin zelus, (or rather zelosus,) or be a formative of our own from zeal, as villanous, libellous, &c. from villain, libel, &c. analogy might very allowably be pleaded for the long sound of the diphthong; and if custom were less decided, I should certainly give my vote for it; but as propriety of pronunciation may be called a compound ratio of usage and analogy, the short sound must in this case be called the proper one.—See Knowledge, and Principles, No. 515.

ZEALOUS, zélús, or zélús, a. Ardently passionate in any cause.

ZEALOUSLY, zélús-lé, or zélús-lé, ad. With passionate ardour.

ZEALOUSNESS, zélús-nés, or zélús-nés, s. The quality of being zealous.

ZECHIN, tshé-kéén, s. A gold coin worth about nine shillings sterling.

ZED, zéd, or zé-zúrd, s. The name of the letter Z, the last of the English alphabet.

☞ For the proper name of this letter, see Principles, No. 483.

ZENITH, zé-nít, s. The point overhead opposite to the nadir.

☞ I never once called in doubt the pronunciation of this word, till I was told that mathematicians generally made the first syllable short. Upon consulting our orthöepists, I find all who have the word, and who give the quantity of the vowels, make the e long, except Entick. Thus Sheridan, Kenrick, Scott, Buchanan, W. Johnston, and Perry, pronounce it long; and if this majority were not so great and so respectable, the analogy of words of this form ought to decide. See Principles, No. 544. See Clef and Construe.

ZEPHYR, zéféér, 543. }
ZEPHYRUS, zéféér-ús, } s.

The west wind, and poetically any calm soft wind.

ZEST, zést, s. The peel of an orange squeezed into wine; a relish, a taste added.

To ZEST, zést, v. a. To heighten by an additional relish.

ZETICK, zé-tét-ík, a. 509. Proceeding by inquiry.

ZEUGMA, zúg-má, s. 92. A figure in grammar, when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers substantives, is referred to one expressly, and to the other by supplement, as, Lust overcame shame, Boldness fear, and Madness reason.

ZIGZAG, zíg-zág, s. Any thing composed of short turns.

☞ This is a word of ludicrous formation, but, like others of the same kind, very expressive, and frequently used by the best authors. Pope has very happily exemplified the use of it in his Dunciad, where he says:

"Round him much embryo, much abortion lay,

"Much future ode and abdicated play;

"Nonsense precipitate like running lead,

"That slip'd through cracks and zig-zags of the head."

Dunciad, l. v. 121.

ZIGZAG, zíg-zág, a. Having many short turnings; turning this way and that.

ZINC, zínk, s. 408. A semi-metal of a brilliant white colour approaching to blue.

ZODIACK, zó-dé-ák, or zó-jé-ák, s. 293, 294. 870. The track of the sun through the twelve signs, a great circle of the sphere, containing the twelve signs.

ZONE, zóne, s. A girdle; a division of the earth.

ZOOGRAPHER, zó-óg-grá-fúr, s. One who describes the nature, properties, and forms of animals.

ZOOGRAPHY, zó-óg-grá-fé, s. 518. A descriptor of the forms, natures, and properties of animals.

ZOOLOGY, zó-ól-ló-jé, s. 518. A treatise concerning living creatures.

ZOOPLYTE, zó-ló-fíte, s. 156. Certain vegetables or substances which partake of the nature both of vegetables and animals.

ZOOPIHORICK, zó-ól-fór-ík, a. 509. In Architecture, having the figure of some animal.

ZOOPIHOROUS, zó-ól-ó-rús, s. 557. The member between the architrave and the cornice, so called because it had sometimes the figures of animals carved on it.

ZOOTOMIST, zó-ól-tó-míst, s. A dissector of the bodies of brute beasts.

ZOOTOMY, zó-ól-tó-mé, s. 518. Dissection of the bodies of beasts.

APPENDIX.

THE Appendix in the fourth Edition being incorporated into the present, no place could be found for the following class of words of the termination in ose, which are so variously accented by our Lexicographers; but which, from their form and derivation, ought certainly to be pronounced alike. This will evidently appear from the following sketch:

Ash.	Johnson.	Sheridan.	Entick.	Kenrick.	Perry.	Nares.	Scott.	Buchanan.
An'hclose,	An'helo'se,	An'helo'se.

Ac'tuose,	Actuo'se,
Pu'licose,	Pulico'se,	Pulico'se.

The variety of accentuation which this sketch exhibits, sufficiently shows how uncertain are our Dictionaries where usage is obscure. From the decided prevalence of the accent on the last syllable of these words, we may easily guess at the analogy of pronunciation, and, with very little hesitation, determine that the accent ought to be placed on the last syllable of them all.
